

For District Attorney Paul A. Kunkel

To the People of Dauphin County:

As early as August 31, 1915, I issued cards briefly setting forth the salient points of the Kunkel-Stroup Election Contest in Court, and Mr. Stroup never even attempted to controvert in any particular any statement made by me. I set forth the salient features of said Election Contest more fully in my platform published long before the Primary in all the newspapers of Harrisburg and nearly all the papers of the County. But now, in the last hours of the campaign, he has issued a statement addressed to the Citizens of Dauphin County which he publishes in the weekly newspapers of the County just before the election, so that no answer can be made by me in the same newspapers prior to said election. Has not his silence during all these weeks of the campaign, both prior to the primary and since, been an admission of the truth published by me. His entire address is very misleading, but I desire especially to call particular attention to that part of his statement relating to the Examiners appointed by the Court in their opening of the ballot boxes, which I quote:

"First of all, the examiners found the lists of those electors who voted, then, after finding the total number voting, counted the stubs from which the ballots were torn; and finally counted the ballots found in the box. In every instance the number of voters corresponded with the number of stubs from which the ballots had been torn, and also with the number of ballots found in the ballot box, showing clearly that every vote cast was accounted for."

This statement is absolutely false, there is not a scintilla of truth in it. What Mr. Stroup in detail expressly states, was not done in any particular; that is what I contended at the time should be done; that is what Mr. Stroup contended should not be done; the Court decided in his favor and it was not done. All that was done was simply looking over the ballots in the boxes, and making note of those marked with a double cross. Therefore, every particular is absolutely false. His "eleventh hour last card" can only be accounted for as a confession of defeat and by the fear that the voters will reaffirm my election of four years ago.

The Report of the said Examiners to the Court, filed January 17, 1912, shows that nothing was done as recited by Mr. Stroup, but merely that the ballots were inspected and notations made of the double cross ballots.

It is unnecessary to add that his further statements, framed as they are, are also intended to mislead.

Yours very truly,
PAUL A. KUNKEL.

October 29, 1915.

We, the Attorneys for Mr. Kunkel in said Election contest, who are named by Mr. Stroup in his said address, hereby certify that the statements in said Address are misleading, and that especially the facts contained in the above quotation in said Address are absolutely false. See the Report of the Examiners, open to public inspection, filed to No. 1184 Sept. Sess. 1911, in the Prothonotary's Office.

October 29, 1915.

SHIFTING ARGENTINA'S TRADE

By Frederic J. Haskin

recovered much during 1914. The first six months of 1915, however, tell a very different story. The trade of Argentina during those months was still 30 per cent. below normal, total decrease being about $88,000,000. Of this immense amount, Germany lost $25,000,000, the United Kingdom $22,000,000 and the United States only $1,650,000; these figures being obtained by comparing the imports for the first six months of 1915 with those of the same months for 1914.

Thus the United Kingdom and Germany were both heavy losers, while the United States, by taking to itself a large part of their losses, kept its own trade at just about normal. More than this could scarcely have been asked.

Even more favorable are the returns on the export trade of Argentina—that is, the amount which other countries have been buying from her. These, too, decreased $130,000,000, or about 25 per cent. during 1915. Germany spent about $27,000,000 less than usual in Argentina; the United Kingdom had $15,000,000 less buying power for that particular country, while the exports from Argentina into the United States increased $19,000,000.

Look to Us
This, of course, is money spent for raw materials, and is money sent out of the country; nevertheless, as an indication of our standing in the Latin American trade, it is no less important than our record of goods, because it means that Argentina is beginning to look to the United States to find customers for its ever-increasing product of grain and beef and hides. And where a people sell they will buy.

During the first six months of 1915, Germany bought practically nothing in Argentina. England, however, in urgent need of foodstuffs and still in possession of the seas, showed an increase of over $17,000,000, while the United States was a close second, with an increase of $16,000,000. Before the great war, England bought just about four times as much from Argentina as we did.

So the figures prove, all pessimists to the contrary notwithstanding, that American exports have risen to the opportunity and taken to themselves a large share of Latin American business, both at the buying and the selling ends. And this, despite the fact that we have been beginning toward establishing those shipping and banking facilities which some experts have declared to be indispensable for the building up of a large export trade.

Can We Hold It?
The question naturally suggested by all this is: What percentage of the trade gained in Argentina and other Latin American countries will we hold after the war is over? The trade experts of the Pan-American Union, who have been studying the returns ever since the war began, have given this question much thought. They say that the opportunity in Latin America has enabled us to introduce there many lines of American goods which were never known in Latin America before. It has given many industries the opportunity to experiment in a new field. Above all, it has given our oldest and strongest industries a hold in Latin America which these experts are confident will never be lost.

BIG INQUIRY TO SET A PRECEDENT

Chairman Ainey Outlines What Commission Will Do Regarding Philadelphia

Hearings in the cases involving the rates and service of the Philadelphia Electric Company, one of the largest propositions undertaken by the Public Service Commission, will be resumed in Harrisburg on December 17 and will probably be transferred to Philadelphia the following week. Chairman Ainey, of the commission, says that the time had been agreed upon at a conference in Philadelphia and was chosen as the earliest reasonable date following the completion of the inventory and appraisal of properties of the company, upon which its experts have been engaged for a long time and which is to be filed November 15. The chairman said that the commission would hold hearings without permitting any lengthy adjournment until the case was concluded. The hearings will cover both the municipal and domestic services and rates. At the conference Chairman Ainey informed attorneys for the parties to the case that the completion of the inventory and appraisal would remove the one obstacle in the way of speedy determination, as it involves State-wide principles.

Chairman Ainey also discussed with Milo Malby, of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, the matter of securing his services in making an independent inventory of the properties of the company for the commission. He said that the commission desires to obtain the most disinterested advice from the most skilled accountants and engineers of the exact values and to that end is seeking services of men who possess the required technical knowledge and skill for an investigation of such wide interest.
