A SPOONFUL OF SALTS RELIEVES ACHING KIDNEYS

We eat too much meat, which clogs kidneys says noted authority.

If back hurts or Bladder bothers, stop all meat for a while.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and logy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sour, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. — Advertisement.

Women AND THEIR INTERESTS

The Double Code of Morals

By ELIA WHEELER WILCOX (Copyright, 1915, Star Company). Just as every child puzzles his parent here on earth for reclaiming the query, "Who made God so periodically is society puzzled by the following query: Why isn't a good man justified in marrying a woman who has erred?"

Judging by the ethics of society, such an act is invariably to his discredit. Doesn't he deserve credit above and here on earth for reclaiming the woman he loves from a hopeless life, provided she wishes to become better? Social ostracism, I know, is the price they must often pay. The deceiver of man; not God.

Since it was man himself who first started the idea that woman was forever "lost" if she erred through the emotions or the passions, and "saved" if she possessed no other virtue but chastity, it would seem that he has the right to overrule his own law, should he wish to do so, and take to wife the woman whose great mistake some man was to blame for.

Yet, having built his wall and society having based it at the top, it proves to be a perilous or at least uncomfortable, undertaking, when he attempts to scale it. Not long ago I heard an intelligent and broad-minded man assert as a fact that no woman who had erred, from whatever cause or combination of causes, could afterward, however perfectly mated and married, become the mother of well balanced and finely organized children.

Demanding proof, I was left with only the speaker's assertion. Yet some of the most useful and notably worthy people of the world have been branded by society as "illegitimate," and many instances can be found of noble wives and excellent mothers of good children who have risen out of the ashes of error to new birth of pure womanhood.

At the same time, in every social circle in the land, can be found spotless mothers of reckless children, who have inherited the father's vices. There is one reason why it is more difficult for a man to reclaim an erring woman than for a woman to reclaim an erring man. Because of the two codes of morals man has made for himself, the woman who falls usually loses her self-respect sooner than does the man and falls to a lower depth of mental abasement.

She becomes more reckless and it is more difficult for her to reform. The laws of the world render the undertaking peculiarly painful and she frequently returns to her old life of folly in despair when all her aspirations and inclinations are for a better course of conduct.

The best thing for a man to do who contemplates marrying and reforming a repentant woman is to take her to new scenes and surround her with new friends and to let the mantle of silence cover her past. In no way should the subject be referred to, for he makes the woman his wife and by every act and word should he endeavor to build a new life for her and to obliterate the old from her thoughts.

Unless he can do this he had best not attempt to achieve the impossible or to force the world to accept her. And to live socially ostracized in the world is to aggravate the cancer of memory to a virulent cancer, which destroys happiness.

Not the American Way. A young girl in Naples eloped with her lover, who deserted her without legalizing the tie that bound them. She had returned to her home and was forgiven and received by her parents. But her brother insisted that only by her death could the family honor be cleansed, and when the unhappy girl refused to commit suicide the brother stabbed her and then reported his act to the authorities, followed by an admiring throng. This is the result of old world tradition, and very mouldy are ancient ideas are which underlie it. It is the groundless and fountless theory of man's superiority over woman in making two sets of morality—one which renders his own moral derelictions mere incidents in his career, and one which renders a lapse of virtue on her part a crime to be paid for only by her death.

This double code of morals has kept morgues and potter's fields and insane asylums and the ranks of erring women full for centuries; it has been the rock in woman's path to progress. It has hindered many a weak-willed but good and loving-souled woman from turning from her one error and living a worthy and useful life afterward. It has caused the creed of Christ to be a mockery in thousands of churches founted in His name, yet violating His words to the Magdalene: "Go and sin no more." It stones the woman sinner with stones of cruel words and scornful glances.

It is the theory which has been put before the world by men and maintained by them. In the Old World it still prevails, but in our own land, thanks to printing women, it is being need not commit suicide to prove to society that she is repentant. She can join the great army of the world's workers and make herself useful and compel the respect of her fellowmen and women.

She must suffer always with the scars of her mistakes, since it is her nature to feel great remorse. The man feels for his errors; it is seldom she reaches the point of boasting of her sins and follies as he is prone to do. But the avenues of labor, and forgetfulness are open to her even as nowhere else on earth, men are beginning to be made to feel ashamed of licentious conduct.

Recently two men of wealth and high social position were ostracized by clubs and driven from society for betraying two young, trusting girls. At a seashore resort a young man found himself coldly received because of some unsavory escapades in which he had figured. So little by little the two codes of morals are being welded into one.

Men are coming to realize that something resembling decency is demanded of them, and women are coming to realize that one false step does not deprive them of the right to live and work and repent. Suicides from despairing love and bitter sorrow will continue to occur as long as women are temptations and weak will-power continue to exist in the world, but when a woman wants to live and begin life over the whole world will in time reach a standard of contentment and humanity which will render such situations as the one under discussion impossible.
