Population Was on the Increase

Pennsylvania's population jumped over 10,000 during the month of August without counting immigrants. The vital and mortality statistics issued by the State Department of Health for the midsummer month show 19,853 births and only 9,174 deaths. This is the greatest increase in a long time. Causes of death were as follows: Intestinal diseases, 1,922; tuberculosis, 788; cancer, 612; Bright's disease, 621; early infancy, 644; and diabetes, 71. Typhoid fever claimed only 71 lives, scarlet fever 9, the lowest number since the gathering of statistics began; diphtheria, 69; measles, 21; whooping cough, 49; influenza, 11; and malaria only 2, a record breaker. Pneumonia caused 291 deaths. Seventy-seven persons committed suicide, 111 died from railway injuries and 96 were killed in mines, while 533 died from other forms of violence.
