The Dauphin county poor board didn't need to pay the dollar for Chris Horn's hunting license after all. Attorney B. Frank Nead, the board's counsel, paid it.

Chris, who lives a few miles back of Highspire, isn't in the best of health nor financial circumstances. His physical clan advised him to hunt. He hadn't the dollar to pay for the license and the poor board offered to "stake" him. The board's attorney to-day decided that it would be best for an individual to assume the debt and he called at the county treasury for that purpose. the county treasury for that purpo
