STREETER'S OASIS RAIDED BY POLICE

Fifty Shots Exchanged and Firemen Tear Down Famous Shack

Chicago, Nov. 15.—After an exchange of 50 shots, the police yesterday invaded and captured Captain George Wellington Streeter's "District of Lake Michigan," a plot of filled-in land on the shore of Lake Michigan, where until to-day Streeter had successfully defied the officers who sought to arrest him on a charge of violating the Sunday closing order.
Streeter's fight for his "district" in years past is well known throughout the country.
Mrs. John Holst, wife of one of Streeter's tenants, was slightly wounded; Streeter, his wife, and 15 others were placed under arrest and 192 cases of beer, six rifles, four revolvers and a quantity of ammunition were confiscated.
The land claimed by Streeter by squatter's right, adjoins the fashionable Lake Shore residence district. Streeter and his wife came there in a sailing vessel years ago. The land involved was formed by sand filling in between the wreck and the beach.
Since Mayor Thompson's Sunday closing order Streeter is alleged to have done a thriving business.
Eight detectives, personally unknown to Streeter, entered the Oasis, as it was called, where it is said they found a number of patrons. After giving his order one of the detectives signaled to the attacking force and the police charged on the "district." Streeter, according to the police, seized a rifle and fired, but was overpowered by the detectives within the building.
Shots came from adjoining buildings, the police say, and in answering one from the house of John Holst the police are believed to have wounded Mrs. Holst. Harry De Carmark, 17 years old, who lives with Streeter, was found shivering on a cake of ice in a refrigerator guarding the supply of beer with a rifle.
After the police made their assault a fire company pulled down the Oasis.

CURING A MILLION DRUG FIENDS

By Frederic J. Haskin

[Continued from Editorial Page.] stated that they had taken many cures, fought the demon in the open, prayed to God for relief, but that nothing had prevailed. Now the writer had taken the last of their hoarded store that he might have sufficient relief to write the letter. Many times had they resisted the drug until their nerves went to pieces, till the itch of ten thousand crawling insects beneath their skin was upon them, till their muscles were knotted with cramps, till they were seized with an overpowering nausea. Then they had broken down, and drawn upon their scant store. Now it was gone, and there was no relief but that which might come in mercy from Washington or in death. An old soldier wrote to the president. He stated that he had developed the laudanum habit when he suffered from a wound in the Civil War and had taken the medicine ever since. He held that he could not live without it. There are letters that threaten self-destruction and others that threaten death to government officials—wild and incoherent outpourings that come in every mail. Each day the hoard that some addict had hidden away for himself is exhausted, and a new tragedy is dragged into the open. While the government appreciates the horror of these tragedies, it does not consider its course as heartless. It knows, for instance, that the ravings of most of these people will pass, and that, not being able to see the drug, they will of necessity be cured of their habit. Thus will they profit from their suffering. There are certain very old people who have taken the drug for such length of time that taking it away from them might result in death. To such as these, a physician may prescribe the drug without fear of prosecution by the government if he indicates on the prescription the circumstances in each particular case. The federal law provides that every individual under the flag who handles habit-forming drugs shall be specially licensed and registered, and that nobody may sell or dispense these drugs except upon receipt of a written order of a registered person or the prescription of a physician. The physician is forbidden to prescribe them except for necessary, curative purposes. The internal revenue collectors furnish blanks to all persons licensed to handle narcotics. No one may buy or sell any such drug without reporting the transaction to the government. Every wholesale dealer in drugs, every drug store, every physician and dentist, leaves a record of every sale. The government agent goes to Podunk. He looks through the files of the transactions of the wholesale dealer. Perhaps he finds that a drug store is getting more morphine than is considered normal. It is a clue. That drug store is examined to determine just how it disposes of its morphine. A look through the records of the physicians' prescriptions in Podunk will show which doctors are inclined to prescribe opiates too freely. Investigations will follow. Every ounce of opiate sold under license in the United States may be traced to its destination. The illicit trade which gets its supply of dope through smugglers is another problem. Internal revenue agents and customs officials co-operate in running down these criminals. The enforcement of the drug law was initiated by B. R. Rhoads, a young man who is both a detective and a scientist. Later he was transferred to another department, and the work placed in the hands of B. C. Keith, who has had a long and varied experience in government detective work. The officials who have had most to do with the work fully appreciate both the tremendous difficulty and the honor and suffering that it involves. But they are confident of its success and sure of the necessity for it. They look forward to a generation which shall be free of this most insidious and destructive of national vices.
