HUNTERS ASKED TO ASSIST STATE
 To Prevent Fires and Pollution Should Be the Business of Every Hunter Now

Probably the most extensive plant of co-operation ever worked out by the State government for enforcement of State laws against pollution of streams, for the prevention of fire and for the proper observance of the game laws, will be put into effect on December 1 when the deer season opens. Judging from the demand for permits to camp on State lands and for hunters' licenses more men will be in the woods during the fifteen days of the deer season than usual and the State authorities have taken measures to not only prevent illegal killing of game, but to check as far as possible forest fires due to hunters or pollution of streams.

The game commission will have the assistance of the fish wardens, forest wardens, rangers and foresters in enforcing the game laws together with State police who are being equipped for rural patrol work. In addition the new bureau of forest fire protection has enlisted not only the aid of these departments, but of many local associations and farmers in keeping down fires and hunters will be warned to extinguish camp fires and to be very careful about causing fires accidentally.

More fires than generally known have been traced to careless camping parties and this year the greatest organized effort to prevent fires has been made. Hunters have been asked by the Forestry department to co-operate in putting out fires, while the State Department of Health has asked their co-operation in proper disposal of waste and in checking stream pollution.

Commissioner Samuel G. Dixon plans to send inspectors to camp sites and where flagrant violations have been traced the facts will be reported to the proper authorities and permits to camp on State reserves refused next year.

LONG STRAIGHT STREETS

In the world as known to Baedeker there are only two streets that can compare with Fifth Avenue and these are both on Manhattan Island. From its source in the asphalt bottoms of Washington Square to where it loses itself in the coal middens of the Harlem river at One Hundred and Forty-third street, the avenue runs a course of almost exactly seven miles. It runs true to the North Star, without a turn, with only a pause, grimly bent on its business, in a way calculated to make the dowager metropolises of Europe lift their eyebrows and say "How American!" Its rivals are Eighth Avenue, a half-mile to the west, which may be some nine hundred feet longer; and, still farther west, Tenth, or Amsterdam Avenue, the titan of all urban highways, nine miles up hill and down as determined in the primeval blue-print shaped by the city fathers some time about the year 1800. All three streets have character as well as length, but Fifth Avenue alone has significance. —Simeon Strunsky in Harper's Magazine.

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN CRIED

Suffered Everything Until Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Florence, So. Dakota. — "I used to be very sick every month with bearing down pains and backache, and had headache a good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. F. W. JANSSEN, Box 8, Allyn, Wash.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Putting Efficiency Into Local Church Management

Property Worth a Billion and a Half of Dollars, and With Fifty Million Shareholders
 (By the Religious Rambler)

With a billion and a half of dollars invested in its plant, and with an income for all religious and benevolent purposes of something over a million dollars a day, the Christian Church in the United States is finding itself under fire for its slothful methods in the local church. While at once the biggest business enterprise in the land, and the most widely distributed, the Church (in which word all denominations are included) is taxed with having the least system and efficiency in the administration of its local branches.

Steady pressure is being applied from various sides to remedy a condition which is deemed intolerable in the light of modern methods of conducting other business. The Laymen's Movement, now under way in this country, has been a potent force for better methods of work and the influence of the Men and Religion Movement is still felt; while many of the denominations themselves have commissions on efficiency and systematic finance. What is called "The Every Member Canvass" has done much to put the financial affairs of the churches on a business basis.

The Real "Big Business"

While religious statistics are notoriously unreliable, estimates often taking the place of accurately tabulated reports, it is generally agreed with the 1906 Government Census as a basis, that the totals are about as follows:

There are thirty-seven and a quarter million enrolled members in the churches of the country. This embraces also the Catholic churches, whose figures take in all baptized members of the parishes, and so include children. More than half the population of the country are counted as "adherents" of the church; that is, they have some more or less tenuous connection with local congregations, and attend services more or less regularly.

The seating capacity of the churches of the land is fifty-eight and one half million persons. The number of church buildings was, at last report, 192,795; since those figures are old, it is probably safe to say, in the general terms that are all too loosely used in religious statistics, that there are two hundred thousand church buildings in America. The membership of the average church is computed as 157 persons.

The property investment of the church, in all the sorts of buildings that it uses aside from strictly educational purposes, is a billion and a half and local church federations, have been at work to secure more definite data concerning the churches. They find the task almost an impossible one. The simple reason is that in an amazing number of cases the keeping of records is left with the ministers, who are notoriously unsystematic; and a change of pastors means a complete break in the records.

In a surprising number of cases, congregations do not know where they stand numerically or financially. Old members are lost sight of; one big city church recently purged its roll of more than a thousand names of "members" who could nowhere be found, although they had for years been appearing in the church's statistical reports.

On the financial side, curiously, the churches have more careful records than on the human side. Yet it is an open scandal that in churches not a few, often money given for benevolences, like missions, has been appropriated for current expenses by inefficient trustees or treasurers. Even after all the agitation of recent years, probably less than half the churches in the land have a budget system, such as a good business house would use. In this direction noteworthy efforts toward improvement are being made by the general denominational agencies and allied organizations.

Some time ago a careful canvass was made of two thousand churches upon
