"Until Mr. Redfield changed it it was customary in Government publi-cations touching foreign and domestic commerce to give the figures for three years, to afford a basis for intelligent comparison. The September trade analysis gives the figures for only two years of comparison; 1913 is ignored. "Comment on the exports for the nine months ended September, 1915, is superfluous. The increase in all products that are used for food or for military accoutrement are astounding. Behind these figures Democracy takes refuge and that the country is too drunk with 'war order' prosperity too study the shoricomings of the Demo-cratic tariff policy is the hope of thoses who forced the Underwood tariff law onto the country."
