KEEPS KIDNEYS ACTIVE WITH A GLASS OF SALTS

Must flush your Kidneys occasionally if you eat meat regularly.

Noted authority tells what causes Backache and Bladder weakness.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys. The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy. Measure a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in uric acid, and to loosen cements, thus ending bladder disorders. Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.—Adv.

Acid Stomachs Are Dangerous

Common Sense Advice by a New York Physician

"Acid" stomachs are dangerous because too much acid irritates and inflames the delicate lining of the stomach, thus hindering and preventing the proper action of the stomach, and leading to probably nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble from which people suffer. Ordinary medicines and medicinal treatments acting only upon the stomach walls, or as an artificial digestant, are useless in such cases, for they leave the course of the trouble, the excess acid in the stomach, as dangerous as ever. The acid must be neutralized, and this is done by the use of plain bicarbonate of soda, a simple acid, taken in a little warm or cold water after eating, which not only neutralizes the acid, but also prevents the fermentation. Foods which ordinarily distend may be digested perfectly if the meal is followed with a little bicarbonate of soda, which can be obtained from any druggist and should always be kept handy.—Advertisement.

WOMEN AND THEIR INTERESTS

What Happened to Jane

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XVII Copyright, 1915, Star Co. Mrs. Hardy looked up anxiously as Jane came out upon the veranda. "I was wondering where you were," she said. "I was afraid you might be feeling sick. Mr. Reeves was just asking when you became of you." The girl tried to smile. "I—I was talking to father when you called me," she explained. For some time nobody spoke. She was miserable. Had her father really spoken those words that still rang in her ears? She felt as if she must have been dreaming as she watched Ezra return to the group he had left so short a while ago, and sitting down by Augustus Reeves, begin to talk about the borers in his fruit trees. For some time nobody spoke directly to her, and she listened to the conversation as one half-asleep might listen to talk in another room. The moon was rising slowly and calmly above the treetops and she watched it fixedly. Was it possible that this awful thing had been said to her since Ned and she had watched that moon—"our old moon," as he had called it? He had said that it was smiling on him and her. It was not smiling now, but gazing unperturbably on all the joy and suffering in the world. She clasped her hands together tightly as she heard a train whistle up the valley. That was Ned's train. She listened as it slowed up at the station, and stood, panting, while the passenger's doors opened. Then it began to puff, slowly at first, then more rapidly, until the sound became once more a continuous roar. Another warning whistle from the locomotive as it approached a crossing a mile down the road—then only a confused murmur in the distance, and all was still as before. Her father made an effort to go. Ezra Hardy rose stiffly. "Ma," he said, "there's a little bit of mending I'd like you to do for me to-night. Suppose we leave Jane to talk to Gus for a while and you attend to your work. We'll be out in about a half-hour," he informed his guest. "That's all right—take your own time," Augustus said. "Jane and I'll get along all right by ourselves, I guess." Mr. Hardy said nothing, and in the moonlight the girl fancied that her mother's face grew a shade paler. Jane rose as her parents stood up. When they had gone indoors she sat down again. She remained silent as Augustus Reeves began his speech, first getting up and closing the door that led out upon the veranda. "When I have anything special to say, I like to know that there isn't anybody listening," he explained. She had an impulse to resent his words, to tell him that her people could not sink to the ignominy of eavesdropping, but as she recalled what her father had said to her only a little while ago she felt that she did not know what he might stoop to. She had never loved her father as she loved her mother—but she had been fond of him, and had always respected him. Had she never known him until now? He brought her thoughts and attention back to what Augustus Reeves was saying. It was, at first, just what he had told her often before. He stood high in the community, he informed her; he had a fine farm, a good income, and was making money from several excellent investments. But he was lonely. Her heart gave a sickening throb. If she only dared to run away—dared to scream—dared tell him to stop! "It's many years now since my wife died," he remarked. "And I feel very much the need of a wife. You would suit me in many ways, Jane. Will you marry me?" He leaned toward her and took her hand in his. She matched it away. His touch made her shudder. "I—I—can't!" she gasped. "I don't love you!" He smiled as he might have smiled at an ignorant child. "I don't expect that you do love me yet, Jane," he rejoined. "But you will soon. I don't think that I would care specially for any young woman who would say that she loved a man until she was quite sure that he wanted her. I do want you, and I believe you'll suit me very well. You have faults, of course—but who hasn't? And I'm sure that when you see how well I can provide for you, when you change from this house to my big one, when you see how nice everything is here—you'll be glad you took the step—glad and thankful. I know you've got quite a lot to learn, but Mary—that is Mrs. Baird, my housekeeper—will teach you." The world swam around his listener. He talked as if he had settled everything in spite of her. Could it be that he had dared speak in this way of her father—but who hasn't? And I'm sure that when you see how well I can provide for her, and was she to be disposed of, or purchased, as if she were a horse or some other dumb creature that this man had decided to own? She thought of Edward Sanderson. He was her refuge, yet her tongue refused to speak of him to this man. She could not name her love—the most beautiful thing in her life—in this gross presence. But she must say something—something to let him know that she could not listen to anything else he had to say—that she could never, never marry him. "You—you—don't understand," she stammered. "I—I—could not marry anyone I did not love. And—besides—I—I—have—Oh, it's impossible, Mr. Reeves—quite impossible!" She sprang to her feet as he tried again to seize her hand, and, eluding him without a backward glance went swiftly into the house and up to her room.

SITES GIVES TIPS ON HOLIDAY MAIL

Postmaster Issues Instructions to Public to Insure Delivery of Christmas Gifts

An additional receiving station for the rush of Christmas mail will be established again this year at 206 North Second street, in the Donaldson building, according to a statement just issued by Postmaster Frank C. Sites. The post office force is now adequately equipped and prepared to handle all mail and parcel post matter in an expeditious manner, and the postmaster urges that shoppers send their Christmas parcels early, marked "Do Not Open Until Christmas," which will insure their prompt delivery and facilitate matters for the sender and the Post Office Department. The public is also urged to insure parcels of value, as the low rate is within reach of everyone and makes it doubly advisable that the packages be protected. The following holiday mailing suggestions were prepared by Postmaster Sites: "1. In the preparation of parcels use good strong wrapping paper and twine. Securely pack, wrap and tie all parcels. "2. Be sure to place the name and address of both sender and addressee on all parcels. Address parcels with ink. "3. Do not seal parcels or place writing in them unless you wish to pay the first class rate of postage. Parcels will be examined and rated according to the class of matter they contain. "4. If the parcel contains fragile or perishable matter it should be so marked and will be handled by postal employees accordingly. "5. Be sure to prepay the right amount of postage. Take your parcels to the post office or nearest station and have them rated by the clerk. "6. Do not seal the flaps of your packages with Christmas seals as this makes them sealed matter chargeable at the first class rate of postage. "7. All valuable parcels should be insured. The low rate of insurance places this within easy reach of all. "8. Christmas stickers should not be placed on the address side of mail matter. These should be placed on the reverse side. "9. Umbrellas, golf sticks and canes should be fastened between boards longer than the article itself and securely wrapped with good quality of paper and twine. Hats should be crated or placed in double corrugated pasteboard boxes. Glassware, crockery, Christmas toys and other similar fragile articles should be packed in boxes of wood, metal, or corrugated pasteboard. "10. Special delivery stamps will be placed on the address side of mail matter and the use of the special service is recommended. The proper place to derive the best piano value is Spangler's, Sixth above Macey.—Adv.

One of these proposes, when you have paid in $50 at the rate of one dollar a week, to lend you $50 so that you can buy a $100 bond; this bond the bank will hold as security until you have paid off the loan. The bank is a national bank, under the supervision of the federal government; and the bonds it sells to small investors on this plan are such as it buys in large amounts for the investment of a part of its own funds.—John M.
