Women AND THEIR Interests

What Happened to Jane

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XVIII
COPYRIGHT, 1915, SIM COMPANY.
When Jane Hardy had reached her own room and locked the door she stood still listening.
She had come upstairs so quietly that her parents, in the sitting room, had not heard her footsteps.

the very beginning? He never could have succeeded—here?
She remembered with a glow of comfort the arguments Ned had used to-day to prove that her father could not really have any tangible ground for refusing his consent to their union.
She smiled as she recalled that Ned had said that he knew he was not worthy of her.

A SMART COAT OF SATIN-CLOTH
The Pattern for this Design Besides Allowing for All Seams, Gives the True Basting Line and shows Diagrams for Cutting and Making.
By MAY MANTON

It would be hard to find a prettier coat for a little girl than this one. In the picture, it is made of satin-cloth that is really glorified broadcloth, in a pretty shade of brown and is trimmed with brown fur.
The skirt portion is straight and shirred and joined to a plain body portion and the body portion with the shirred lower edge is arranged over a plain one, therefore, if a plainer coat is wanted, the shirred body portion can be omitted as indicated in one of the small views.
Again, the pattern gives a choice of two closings, of lapped edges or edges that meet at the center. The satin-cloth is one of the best liked and one of the most available materials of the season, but plain broadcloth makes charming coats chignon velvet is extensively used for little girls' coats and any material that is soft enough to be shirred successfully can be used.
