Helen dressed with unusual care and tied on her face veil with a glance of approval in the mirror. She was going down to Warren's office, her mind was made up on that score, and although she had no faint idea of what she was going to do and how she was going to act, she had determined to meet Miss Evans face to face.

She had her excuse safely tucked away in her head. Warren had forgotten to leave her money to pay her bills.

Whether Warren liked it or not, the best cards were in her own hands, and she would use them to the best advantage.

She hurried along after leaving the subway and entered the office building. The elevator left her at Warren's floor and she opened the door of his office. Warren looked up from his desk. A blonde young woman sat at the typewriter and she looked up also as Helen entered. Warren rose hurriedly.

"Get up, dear," said Helen, breezily conscious that she looked her best, and then quite audibly. "Did you forget to leave my money?"

"Guess I must have. Did you need it to-day?"

"Why, surely, because I came down for it." She paused and looked sideways at the stenographer.

"Do you want bills?" queried Warren.

"Yes, please; I am going shopping this morning."

Warren was about to walk over to the safe when Helen said sweetly: "Is this Miss Evans, dear?"

There was silence for a moment, and the girl looked up from her work. Her cheeks were flushed, a simple little blue dress open at the throat, her wonderful hair gathered up on top of her head. She was too artificial looking, but then men never discriminated, thought Helen to herself.

"Are you a stranger here in the city?" she continued.

"Yes, I am," the girl said, after a minute's pause.

"Well, it doesn't take long to make friends, does it? Didn't I see you at the Gilmore having tea last week? I know Mr. Curtis—recognized you. Where is your home, Miss Evans?"

The girl hesitated. "We did come from the South," she said, finally. "But we are scattered all around now."

"My husband has told me all about you, and you must let me do anything

I can to help you. I was talking of your case only yesterday to a friend. Do you like your present work?"

"Yes, I do," said the girl.

The girl sat silent, and Helen turned again to Warren.

"Well, dear, I am waiting for the money. Oh, Miss Evans," she said, turning as though it had just occurred to her, "you mustn't let that affair of the other evening make you unhappy. I hope you found your mother better?" she asked sweetly.

Warren was at the safe and turned as though to expostulate with Helen. Helen did not see him, however.

"Wasn't it your mother? Oh, my mistake. Of course, Mr. Curtis was glad to do what he could for you, and so was I. You must help me to correct any unpleasant rumors that you happen to hear. You know how they will spread."

"Here's your money," said Warren, coming over and interrupting the conversation. His brow was as black as a thunder cloud, and he handed the bills just at present. And don't let any of those horrid men make her uncomfortable. That is the penalty for being so pretty, Miss Evans," she said, turning back to the girl. "If you get tired of office work, why don't you try moving pictures?"

The girl looked up as though to say something, but her eyes fell before Helen's. Helen felt as though she could not humiliate her enough before Warren.

She turned her gaze on Warren and the words on his lips died away.

"Where shall I meet you, dear, at Manley's? All right, 12:30 sharp. Good-by," and Helen reached up and planted a kiss on the tip of his nose.

Then she swept out with a nod to Miss Evans. Her cheeks were on fire and she quaked inwardly, but she hadn't been so happy in four days. Warren would see that she had some pride, even if it happened to be furious at what she had done.

TESTING WOULD-BE SINGERS

A device has just been perfected in the psychological laboratories of the University of Iowa by which any aspirant for musical honors may determine the extent of his powers with scientific exactitude.

The device consists of a delicate tuning fork and a miniature telephone. The full musical note is divided into fifty-two parts, and by means of the telephone the director of the department can ascertain just how susceptible the pupil is to minute gradations of sound. The test does not require the singing of a note, or the use of any musical instrument, but it makes possible the filling out of a chart which indicates absolutely the musical susceptibility of the student.

A FASHIONABLE COAT OF CORDUROY

The Pattern for this Design Besides Allowing for All Seams, Gives the True Basting Line and shows Diagrams for Cutting and Making.

By MAY MANTON

8865 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Girl's Coat, 8 to 14 years.

Corduroy is being much used for girls' coats this season. It is always an attractive material and just now, it is shown in some very beautiful two-toned effects as well as in the plain colors. This model is such a simple one that any mother can undertake it without hesitancy, yet the lines are the smartest possible. The yoke fits smoothly, below the yoke the coat is plaited, while the belt holds it in place. Here, the collar is fur and fur seems to be the accepted finish, but there are other possible materials. On the corduroy, broadcloth would be handsome and if the coat were made of broadcloth, velvet would make a handsome trimming and the list of available cloaking materials for the girls' use is a very long one. Velveteen is being much used and velvet is of course desirable for the handsomer coat and the satin cloths are very lovely and all the velvet finished wools are in vogue. The pattern gives both the seams and the basting line, therefore, it is impossible to lose the outline, and it is the easiest thing in the world to cut out and to sew up.

For the 12 year size will be needed, 4 yds. of material 36 in. wide, 3 3/4 yds. 44, 3 yds. 54 in. wide.

The pattern 8865 is cut in sizes from 8 to 14 years of age. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

AGENCY, BESSIE E. POORMAN, 222 Locust Street.

REGULATING THE PHONOGRAPH'S VOICE

An instrument has recently been patented which is remarkably efficient in clarifying the tone and increasing the volume of sound of the phonograph. It consists of a thin celluloid composition disc which is attached to the needle. It not only increases the volume ten-fold, but preserves the purity of tone by its vibratory action. The disc does not touch the record, but rides about a quarter of an inch above it, with the needle inserted through a central hole. Although designed first for the steel needle, the disc can also be used with the fiber needle, and patents are applied for covering its means of adjustment to several classes of phonographs.
