"And for pity's sake be ready on time," Warren had said as he left that morning.

"We had better start before it gets too cold," he had said when he had announced to Helen that the car was finished.

"How nice, dear," Helen had said enthusiastically, with never a remark about the car, and never a suggestion that she remembered all that had happened.

"I know you wouldn't be ready," said Warren testily. "After all your vows not to be late."

"No, I just came back for these. I guess there won't be any lunch for me to-day. Too many things to think of."

"I'll keep something for you, shall I?"

"No, don't bother, I won't have time to eat anything," and the door slammed.

Helen went on with her dressing and at 12 o'clock called Winifred and went in to lunch.

Warren's Mother is suddenly taken ill.

"Hello, who is it?" she said going to the telephone.

"Is this you, Helen?"

"Yes, who is this, Carrie?" Helen's heart sank and she swallowed nervously.

"Is anything wrong?" she continued as naturally as possible.

"Warren's mother is very sick, Helen. You'd better tell him to come up right away."

Helen was shocked at the news. Much as she detested old Mrs. Curtis, she felt dreadfully for Warren in a case of this kind.

"Oh, what is it, Carrie? It must be very sudden."

"Yes, it is sudden; she has had a cold and was taken with a fever last night. The doctor pronounced it pneumonia, and she is very weak."

"I'll call up Warren right away, Carrie, and we will both be up as soon as we can get there."

Helen hung up the receiver and then called Warren's number.

Mr. Curtis was not at his office, said the new stenographer. He had gone out to the garage, about an hour ago.

Yes, Mrs. Curtis might be able to get him there. Helen called up the garage, but Warren was not there.

Helen sat down and tried to think normally. What would be the best thing to do under the circumstances?

"Of course the trip was out of the question. If only she could get hold of Warren. Well, he ought not to be long coming now."

Helen hurriedly packed out some of the things she had packed for the trip, replacing them with practical things for a trip up to Carrie's.

"I know you wouldn't be ready," said Warren testily. "After all your vows not to be late."

"Dear, your mother is very ill," said Warren. "How do you know? What's the matter?"

"Carrie just telephoned, she has pneumonia. Now don't worry, dear, everything is ready. We can start immediately."

"Start?" said Warren vaguely. "Oh, yes start. We can go up there in the car, you mean?"

"Of course, dear, it's a blessing we have it. There isn't a single thing to do. I have all your things packed."

"Warren, who genuinely loved his mother, seemed dazed, and he watched Helen pin on her veil and snap the traveling bag shut without speaking."

"I thought one bag would be enough," she said calmly. "So I took your things out of the big tan one, dear, and packed what you would need in mine."

"Thanks," muttered Warren, absently. Then suddenly, "Carrie thinks she's bad, does she?"

"They don't know just how bad, Warren, but your mother is old and hasn't much strength, otherwise she would weather it beautifully."

Helen seemed to have brains for both of them and with a hasty kiss for Winifred and a few instructions to Mary, she went out to the elevator followed by Warren, who seemed hardly able to comprehend the news.

"Don't worry, dear, just put your mind on getting us there as soon as possible," Helen counseled as they started.

"It may not be as bad as they think," But somehow Helen did not feel as cheery as she pretended and shuddered and drew her fingers more closely about her as they flew along.

Panels in This Design Give Effect of Height and Slenderness

8804 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Yoke Skirt with Gathered Sides, 24 to 30 waist.

Every variation of the yoke skirt is smart, but this one is especially attractive for the reason that it includes panels which can be extended for full length or cut off at the edge of the yoke as found more becoming.

Helen was hurt at Warren's callousness, but she gave no sign of this as she went up to him.

Warren is shocked at the bad news.

"Dear, your mother is very ill," said Warren. "How do you know? What's the matter?"

"Carrie just telephoned, she has pneumonia. Now don't worry, dear, everything is ready. We can start immediately."

"Start?" said Warren vaguely. "Oh, yes start. We can go up there in the car, you mean?"
