The Battles in Plumpy's Hollow

By EDNA GROFF DIEHL

PLUMPY thought he had grown to know about all the disagreeable little gnomes who camped in his hollow. He thought he knew each nasal tone of each squeaky voice; he thought he knew the tramp of each one's footsteps—he thought he knew the very shapes which wriggled about underneath his jacket. But he was mistaken.

One morning Plumpy had been playing with some little boys in his neighborhood who thought they knew about everything which was to be known. It was just several weeks before Christmas, and he was full of the wonders of Santa Claus and his reindeers, and the marvelous things which he should bring.

"Huh!" said one boy, with a swelling of his chest, "You baby;
there ain't no Santa Claus!"

Poor Plumpy's heart gave one jump. No Santa Claus! Why how terrible—he could conceive of no such thing. So he went home, and cold as he was he sat on the back porch, and once again hid his face in his hands. He had decided to fight the whole problem out in his hollow—or rather let his gnomes and fairies fight it out for themselves.

And then it was that the little Gnome Unbeilef came creeping, face in his hands. He had decided to fight the whole problem out in his hollow—or rather let his gnomes and fairies fight it out for themselves.

And then it was that the little Gnome Unbelief came creeping, crawling along—close to his heart and closer still to mind. Came crawling on its belly, just like a snake.

"Course there's no Santa, you little silly," he hissed. "Course there's no Santa, you little silly," he hissed. "Course there's no Santa—it's folks, and friends and people you know. Aren't you the silly goose to believe—the boys are right."

"But who are you?" asked Plumpy. "That's a new volce—and why don't you stand up straight, instead of just crawling along as if you're ashamed. Who are you, I say?"

"T'm the Gnome Unbelief," came the reply. "Whenever you think folk are fooling you, just you listen to me. I'm very wise—and I know a great deal. I crawl because I can crawl into places where I have no business and find out things I should not know. But I'll tell you truth—and then you won't be a silly."

Well, my dear little ones, Plumpy was simply crushed—imagine, no Santa Claus. Why for years he had shut his eyes tight each Christmas Eve, and gone to sleep listening in his dreams to the airy-fairy sleigh crawling over the roof! And for years he had gotten up on Christmas morning to see the very things he had asked Santa for each night right after his prayers, there under a shining Christmas tree. Poor Plumpy just wept. It was all he could do. And then suddenly he felt a light airy step tripping, tripping over his hollow, and he saw the snaky, treacherous creature Unbellef, slowly crawling away, as If he were ashamed.

"It up your head, Plumpy, and be glad," said the airy creature. "Be glad, Plumpy. Rejoice. Santa is coming."

But there is no Santa, 'sadly said Plumpy. "Unbelief and the boys told me so."

"Poor Plumpy!" said the fairy voice. "Are you going to believe everything Unbelief tells you in your life. Then you will be of all boys most miserable."

"Who are you?" excitedly asked Plumpy. "And

"Poor Plumpy," said the fairy voice. "Are you going to believe everything Unbelief tells you in your life. Then you will be of all boys most miserable."

"Who are you?" excitedly asked Plumpy. "And what do you mean? Tell me, isn't it true? Is there a Santa after all?"

"One question at a time, dear," smilingly answered the fairy voice. "I am the Fairy'Love. The very fairy who lives closest to your heart, and who helps to heal all the stings the nasty gnomes make there. And I mean what I say. Listen dear. Do you believe in Spirits? Do you believe in Love? Do you feel Love? Do you know Love? Do you walk hand in hand with Love sometimes? Then do you believe in Thoughtfulness? and do you believe in Remembrance? And do you believe in Secrets which make folks happy?"

"Well then my dear Plumpy, you believe in Santa. In a real Spirit Santa, the very Spirit of Christmas, who is Love, and who is Thoughtfulness and who is Secret Joy and Happiness-all in one, from his shiny red nose and long flowing beard to the tips of his broad, broad toes, which travel many weary miles from the North Pole to the South Pole each and every year. And you will always believe in him, even when you are a man, whether you hear of him in America as Santa Claus, or Germany as Kris Kingle, or as a maiden in other countries. You will know and believe it is always the same kind, jolly old chap who crawls down your chimney whether the fire burns or is out—each Christmas Eve."

"I believe you Love." shouted Plumpy. "And I will never let boys who listen to the voice of Unbelief make me doubt again. And I do hope Santa will bring me a sled! Oh, I do hope so!"
