TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens Gray Hair So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grand-mother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wynch's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wynch's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, it prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.—Advertisement.

Why I Married a Second Time

By DOROTHY DIX
"I married a second time," said the woman with the tired eyes, "because I can't not live without the love of a woman."
"I am one of the few fortunate men who have been mated as well as married. My first wife and I knew perfect companionship. For over thirty-five years we worked together and played together, we sorrowed and slept together, until we came literally to be a single soul.
"When she died my world fell in ruins about me. For a long time I was so stunned with grief that I was hardly conscious of what I did or what happened to me, I went through the ordinary affairs of life, ate and slept and dressed and attended to my business like a person in a black dream, and then, as time wore on, little by little I began to wake up and get my bearings.
"I found out first that I was horribly uncomfortable physically. My wife had taken care of my bodily comforts so long that I was as helpless to look out for myself as a baby. I couldn't keep up with my clothes.
"But above all else I found that I was starving for the tenderness, and sympathy, and comprehension of a woman. There are men's men and women's men. There are men who find their only true companionship among men. They only care for women as either playthings or judges. They never talk to women except upon trivial matters. When they talk about the things that really grip their souls they talk to a man.
"There are other men who find no real companionship in their own sex. They are shy and reserved before other men, and only a woman's touch is light enough to open the secret doors of their souls, behind which lie hidden their real thoughts and beliefs and aspirations.
"I was his kind of a man. Most men bored me. I cared nothing for the sports or the vices in which the majority of men find their diversion, and which form the principal topic of club room conversation. I could no more have talked to other men about the things that were sacred to me than I could have built an altar in the public street.
"Those who have never known the joy of a real companionship of man and woman in which mind answers to mind, and sympathy to sympathy, and in which every interest is in common, seem to go along very well without it. They develop a stoical self-sufficiency that makes them equal to their own need, just as people who live in arid and sterile lands develop the ability to exist on a small amount of food.
"Of what use to struggle when there was no one to cheer you on or care whether you sank or swam? What sweetness in success if no woman gloried in your victory? Of what avail to toil for money when there was no woman to lavish it on? How the zest went out of everything in life when there was no wife to tell it to, to talk it over with, to sympathize with your part in it.
"I am no fool. I knew well enough that the glory and the rapture of such a love and such a marriage as mine had been cannot be repeated. I knew that I could not hope that Heaven would send me a second wife such as my first wife had been, and I knew, sadly enough, that the best of me was buried in my wife's grave, and that I could not give to another woman the love I had given to her.
"Nevertheless, I determined to marry again. If you are perishing of thirst you do not demand to slake it on vintage champagne. If you are ailing with hunger you grasp at a crust instead of insisting upon feasting on cake.
"A wife would give me companionship for my loneliness, and an object in life, and if the new love could not cure the ache left by the loss of the old one, it would, at least, be a palliation.
"And so that is why I, who loved greatly my first wife and whose marriage was full of great happiness, married a second time."

THE ART OF PACKING CRIPPLES

At ten o'clock one night I found myself on the station platform at Bangor. A train drew up, the Red Cross room at the station was thrown open, hospital orderlies appeared, they began to carry out the wounded from that train. I thought they would never stop; I can't imagine how so many men were got aboard in the first place. Motors waited to carry the patients to the hospital; they returned again and again, fastening two or three extra wounded, flat on stretchers, on the braided tailboards. All about me, waiting in a patient silence, their faces and bodies a mass of bandages, those soldiers lay, looking like so many dead men.

"They do not come directly from the front," explained a nurse to me. "They are but moved here to make room for fresh cases above."
"But this is such a little town," I ventured.
"Yet it is like all the others in France," said she.—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

DROPSY TREATED FREE

By Dr. Miles, the Great Specialist, Who Sends a $3.75 Trial Treatment Free.
Many Report Cured After Others Failed
At first no disease is apparently more harmless than dropsy; a little swelling of the face, hands, feet, ankles, or abdomen. Finally there is great shortness of breath, cough, faint spells, sometimes nausea, and finally, bursting of the limbs and a lingering and wretched death if the dropsy is not removed.
Dr. Miles has been known as a leading specialist in these diseases for 30 years. His liberal offer of a $3.75 Treatment Free to all sufferers, is certainly worthy of serious consideration. You may never again have such an opportunity.
The Grand Dropsy Treatment consists of four dropsy remedies in one, also Tonic Tablets and Pura-Laxa for removing the water. This treatment is specially prepared for each patient and is much more successful than that of most physicians. It usually relieves the first day, and removes swelling in six days in most cases. Delay is dangerous.

COMMONER HOUSUAL DIDN'T THINK JURY UNDERSTOOD

Ex-Common Councilman Louis J. Housual, who is a January petit juror, didn't think some fellow jurors understood "Pennsylvania German" to-day, and he didn't hesitate to rise in his place and say so right out in court.
The case was the trial of Emma Specht, who had been accused by her mother of illegal intimacy with a companion. The mother spoke very vigorously in the language that Mrs. Helen Martin can recite so well. Mr. Housual waiting to be called for duty didn't believe the jurors understood; "That jury," he suddenly declared aloud, "can't understand that talk!" The courtroom laughed, the judge gavelled for order, and the case went on.

WHAT OUR WAR WASTE MIGHT DO

In two years we have spent nearly a billion dollars for war purposes. How much is a billion dollars? * * * We all know what a dollar bill is—a billion of them would make a stack fifty-five miles high. In the last two and a half years we have spent for war a dollar for every minute which has passed since the birth of Christ.

Now, it is interesting to notice what could be accomplished with our war money if it were turned into constructive channels. Let us apply it to education. Estimating the cost of the average university at two and one-half millions, our annual war expenses would build and equip four universities in every State of the Union. The very best two-room modern rural school can be built for $4,000. Our annual war bill applied to this purpose would build 2,500 such schools in every State of the Union. If applied every year it would give every high-school student in the United States a high-school education and the necessary books. It would also give a free college education to six times the number of people enrolled in our colleges. The price of one battle-ship would more than pay for all the school books used in the United States in a year.

From the standpoint of the philanthropist, our yearly war budget would provide the following institutions for the betterment of humanity: ten hospitals at $200,000 each, two insane asylums at $500,000 each, four orphan asylums at $250,000 each, four blind schools at $250,000 each, four old people's homes at $250,000 each, two reform schools at $250,000 each, two schools for defectives at $250,000 each, four industrial training schools at $250,000 each, twenty agricultural high schools at $50,000 each, a model farm in every county of the United States at $2,000, one thousand visiting nurses at $100 per month for the prevention of diseases, $250,000 for the relief of the poor, and another million dollars left for any other purpose.
