

DAINTY DANCING FROCK OF CHIFFON

Attractive Little Bodice Adds to the Lightness of Young Girl's Costume

By MAY MANTON

8634 Gathered Blouse for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 years. 8884 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Gathered Skirt for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 years.

Here is one of the best dancing frocks that could be found. It is made of white chiffon and the skirt is banded with silver gauze. It is an essentially girlish dress and a very fascinating one. Yet it is also a very simple and could be made by any one who can sew a straight seam. The skirt consists of just one straight piece, gathered at its upper edge and the ribbon of graduated widths is arranged on the indicated lines, so that even calculation is not left to the maker. The little bodice is the simple baby one that is always so becoming to young girls, for the round neck and short sleeves suit them to a nicety. The model can be copied in a variety of materials, in crepe de chine, in soft finished taffeta and in any and every material that can be gathered successfully. Rose colored taffeta would be charming with the silver gauze and crepe de chine would be pretty with satin ribbon of the same color and there are various other treatments that will suggest themselves.

For the medium size will be needed, for the bodice, 1 3/4 yds. of material 36 or 44 in. wide; for the skirt, 3 1/4 yds. 36 or 44 in. wide with 3 yds. of ribbon in each width for the bands.

The pattern No. 8634 and the pattern No. 8884 are each cut in sizes for 16 and 18 years. They will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents for each.

GIRL COULD NOT WORK

How She Was Relieved from Pain by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Taunton, Mass. — "I had pains in both sides and when my periods came I had to stay at home from work and suffer a long time. One day a woman came to our house and asked my mother why I was suffering. Mother told her that I suffered every month and she said, 'Why don't you buy a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?' My mother bought it and the next month I was so well that I worked all the month without staying at home a day. I am in good health now and have told lots of girls about it." — Miss CLARICE MORIN, 22 Russell Street, Taunton, Mass.

Thousands of girls suffer in silence every month rather than consult a physician. If girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion would take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a safe and pure remedy made from roots and herbs, much suffering might be avoided.

Write to Lydia E. Pinkham, Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. (confidential) for free advice which will prove helpful.

KEYSTONE STATE FAIR WILL OPEN A NEW ERA IN PENNSYLVANIA LIFE

Why Pennsylvania Needs This State Fair and Industrial Exposition

Every community, large or small, should bring its people together at certain intervals to see and discuss the general conditions of living. The same principle applies to a state at large, and Pennsylvania is no exception. Pennsylvania needs a State Fair to enable her people to study the great industries; to bring them in touch with the best and most modern methods of farming and stock raising; to have them see the enthusiastic movement on foot for the betterment of conditions in the field of poultry; and above all to arouse a universal anxiety for the further uplifting of education and art—two pronounced features alone that are worth millions of investment for future generations.

How Pennsylvania Is Preparing

Pennsylvania is preparing for this great Keystone State Fair and Industrial Exposition as no state ever prepared for a State Fair before. Huge sums of money are being expended for a magnificent 410-acre park, on the banks of the beautiful Susquehanna; for the most modern buildings noted architects know how to conceive, including one of the fastest two-mile auto speedways human genius has ever devised. Aside from this large sum of money have been appropriated for the heralding of this momentous event from one end of the State to the other—throughout every county, in every city, town and hamlet—all to firmly imbed in the minds of over seven millions of people the tremendous benefit that is bound to result from this, America's greatest State Fair.

KEYSTONE STATE FAIR and INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION

CAPITALIZED AT $1,500,000.00 KUNKLE BLDG., HARRISBURG, PA.

This Map Shows the Wonderful Location, the Ideal Railroad and Trolley Connections, and the Enormous Population Within a Few Hours' Ride.

Will Be Open to the Public, Fall of 1916

No location in the entire State could be more perfect as a site for this mammoth carnival than the one selected on the famous Susquehanna, with its beautiful picturesque hills rising on either side. The site lies along the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, just outside of Harrisburg, and as the map here shows, is in direct connection with centers of population aggregating many millions of people.

You Are Invited to Share in Ownership and Profits

It is desired that every citizen in this great commonwealth shall be a unit in bringing about unbounded success of this marvelous enterprise. It is desired that every citizen shall feel, after this has gone down in history, that he was one who helped to build it.

For this reason it has been decided to give every citizen the opportunity to purchase a limited number of shares of stock at $10.00 per share, Par Value. This, it is believed by those already associated with the Keystone State Fair and Industrial Exposition, will prove to be one of the best investments any person can possibly make, in addition to being a "state-pride" boost for grand old Pennsylvania.

"What can I do to help you, dear? There must be something I can do." "You can get my travelling bag out if you will." "The new one?" "Yes, I suppose so, I might as well take it." Helen, with her dress tucked up into the dusty storeroom, Warren was going on one of his rush business trips and she wondered a little that he did not ask her to go with him. She found the new travelling bag and brought it to him. There were several new shirts on the bed. Warren had bought them on the way home. Helen began to arrange them in the bag. Then she brought fresh linen from the chifonier and some new silk ties and socks. "You have plenty of new things to take with you," she remarked, gayly. "It's fortunate that Christmas came when it did—you were pretty low." Warren was struggling into fresh clothes and did not answer at first. "Dear Helen, went on, "You couldn't possibly take me with you, could you?" "Take you with me? Why, could you get ready? You see, I have so little time and there is Winifred, and Helen forced herself not to show that she was hurt. "What time does your train go?" "Nine o'clock; what time is it now?" "Helen Gets a Sandwich "About seven-thirty. Now, wait, dear, and I'll have something hot for you to eat before you go. It will make you feel fine. Did you have much for dinner?" "Just a sandwich. I would like some coffee. You see, I had to fool around arranging details at the office till the last minute, and when I phoned you not to wait dinner I ran out and got a sandwich, but I was too upset to eat." Helen forgot the fact that she was disappointed as she hurried about the kitchen making fresh coffee and cutting sandwiches. She spread a tempting lunch on the dining-room table and then rushed into her own room to slip a note into his collar case, which was on top, and then he would be sure to see it the first thing. "Helen," Warren called, finally, as she did not appear, "what are you doing, anyway, sulking because you can't go along?" "Of course not," Helen retorted, appearing in the doorway. "I suppose it is just as well on account of Winifred, but I don't care to go along with you. I can't expect to go every time." "That's the sensible way to look at it. Of course, there is no real reason why you shouldn't go, only that I didn't suppose you would want to go this time." "Of course," Helen agreed. "Is it time to go, dear? You'll write to me when?" "To-morrow, of course." "All right, here's your bag, take care of yourself." And Helen threw her arms about his neck and kissed him. Warren returned the kiss warmly and was gone. The house seemed unusually still. Helen went into the dining-room and realized that she was hungry. She had eaten very little dinner after Warren had telephoned, and now she hesitated about making some sandwiches for herself. She finally decided that she would and went into the kitchen. As she carried the butter from the icebox to the table the telephone rang. "Who could be ringing up?" she murmured, half aloud. At the telephone she recognized Ned Burns' voice immediately. "Hello, Ned; yes, this is Helen. No, not anything in particular. Why?" "Thought you might let me run up for awhile." "Why, of course," and then Helen remembered that she was alone—it wouldn't do to allow Ned to come up—it wouldn't be fair to Warren. She Asks Ned Not to Come No, Ned, not to-night; Warren has just left for the South, and it would hardly be right." "Not for an old friend like me? Why, I'll wager that if I had called up before Mr. Curtis left he would have said come right along." "I know, but you didn't, and under the circumstances I'd rather not." But Ned Burns was not giving up so easily. "Now listen to me, Helen. I want to come up the very worst way, and there is no reason why I shouldn't come. I'll take my chances with Warren and, besides, he would never know anything about it." "Oh, yes, he would," Helen said quickly, "for I should tell him. Your ideas and mine are entirely different, Ned, there is no need of arguing about it any longer." "Well, will you go out somewhere, then?" "No, I can't do that, either." "Helen, you make me feel like shaking you, you're like all women of your type, stubborn as they make them." "Perhaps, but it can't be helped. Good-night, Ned. Come up and have dinner some night when Warren returns." She went back to the kitchen, made some sandwiches and carried them with the coffee, back to the dining-room. The bell rang and she started up. Then she went to the door and opened it wide. Ned Burns, a half-smile on his handsome face, stood on the threshold.
