"THEIR MARRIED LIFE"

Copyright by International News Service

Helen never forgot the feeling that came over her when she opened the door and saw Ned Burns standing in the doorway. A half embarrassed smile crossed his face at her expression of blank amazement and he moved forward a little.

Helen held the door so that he could not enter and then realizing how futile such a thing was she stepped back and Ned followed her into the dining room.

"Why did you do it, Ned?" she said, turning on him suddenly.

"Because I was determined to see you and saw no reason why I shouldn't."

"The reason that I didn't wish it should have been sufficient," said Helen in her most frigid tones.

"Not when I wanted to so much. Put on your things and we'll take in a show."

"Certainly not; do you think that I would do a thing like that behind Warren's back?"

"Would you do it if he were here?"

"Yes, if he were willing to go with us."

"Are you really so devoted, Helen, or are you simply the wifely type that would not admit to a feeling of wickedness once in a while?"

"I don't know, Ned, but this is certain. You forced your way up here, and now that you see I am really displeased the kindest thing would be to leave me."

"I will, if you will come with me."

Helen did not know what to do. She dreaded entertaining Ned in her apartment alone, and yet she hated to go out with him.

Ned spread some bread with preserves nonchalantly and proceeded to eat it. The situation was unbearable and Helen felt her impotence severely. Somehow she thought desperately, there must be something to do in a situation of the kind, but she didn't know what it could be.

"Very well, Ned," she said finally. "I'll go out with you. But you are not playing the game."

"Oh, now, Helen, you don't mean that," said Ned in his beguiling tones. "I don't want you to feel that way. I like you too much. Why, I came to New York to try to find you. I have always cared, Helen, you know that. I thought I might have the chance to tell you, and then I found I had lost you."

"Ned, please stop; you have no right to speak this way."

"Helen, I care for you—you know that."

"Stop, Ned; I want you to go, please. Nothing that you can say will change my mind. I didn't believe that you could do such a thing in my own house and in Warren's absence."

"Please, Helen, listen to me." But Helen turned away. She was trembling and held on to the table to steady herself. Was this horrible thing actually happening to her? And she was the woman who had wished something out of the ordinary to happen, the woman who had tried to play off Ned Burns against her own husband.

"If you don't leave," said Helen, a little white line showing about her mouth. "I shall. I intend to tell Louise everything. She will believe me."

"Oh, see here, Helen, I'm not such a brute as you are trying to make me out. I'll go. I'm sorry, awfully sorry. I never meant to make you feel like this. Listen, Helen please don't make a mountain out of this. I'll go."

The clock in the hall struck nine, and almost immediately the bell rang. Helen started, and then turned white. Ned looked uncomfortable, and they stood gazing at the door as if dumfounded. Then Helen recovered her senses.

She walked to the door and opened it determinedly. Mr. and Mrs. Thurston stood on the threshold.

"We thought we'd take advantage of this evening and see if you didn't want to play a rubber of bridge," said Mrs. Thurston breezily.

Mrs. Thurston speaks out. "Of course we can," said Helen gaily. "Warren has gone to Norfolk, but Mr. Burns, a friend of the family, is here, and he is a great bridge player."

The Thurstons must not suspect anything and the game would have to be played for all it was worth. "Wait a minute, dear," she called to Mrs. Thurston, "and I will be with you. I want you to meet Mr. Thurston, Ned," she proceeded evenly.

"Mr. Thurston, this is Mr. Burns, an old friend of Warren's and mine. The two men shook hands and Helen went back to her room and kept up a running conversation with Mrs. Thurston, who took off her coat and hat and powdered her nose.

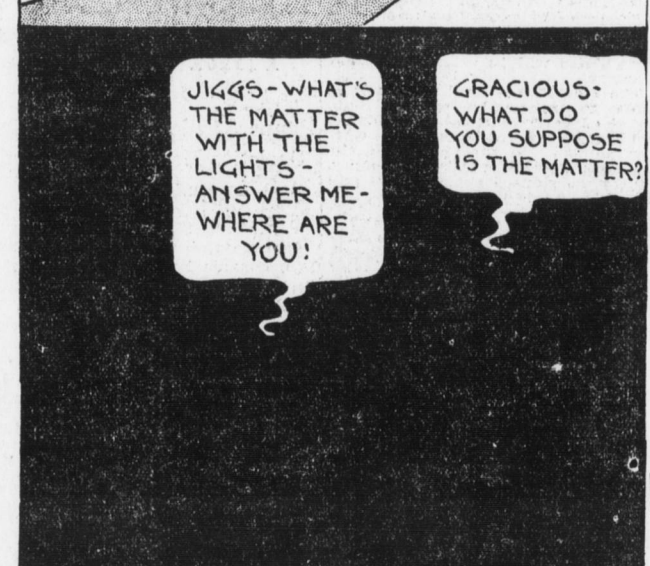

"We are going to take a new apartment next week," she announced calmly, and then, "My dear, who is this man that you are entertaining while poor Warren is out of the way? Looks strange to me."

Mrs. Thurston said this lightly, but Helen knew that if she once suspected anything out of the ordinary she would never rest until she had sited things to the bottom.

"He's an old friend of ours, dear. You see Warren left unexpectedly and we had to make up for what had gone before, was his own charming self, and Helen admitted that he could be attractive, especially to women. He was attentive to Mrs. Thurston, and although he treated Helen courteously he never tried to overstep the bounds. The evening passed very pleasantly.

Ned left with the Thurstons and Helen, weak and trembling, went to bed with a raging headache. She hoped that Warren would never hear of it. If he did he might put any construction he liked on the incident and she would have no defense at all.

Another incident in this entertaining series will appear here soon.

You clean windows CLEAN

"Until some good friend told me of Atlantic Rayolight Oil, washing windows just discouraged me, for try as I might, rub and polish for all I was worth, the windows would get streaky."

"But now I know that if I wash them with Atlantic Rayolight Oil (a half cup to a pail of hot soapy water), my windows will glisten and shine like plate glass and, what's more, they'll keep clean lots longer." So writes one busy, keen housewife.

Other wise housekeepers have found Atlantic Rayolight Oil the very best thing to keep away moths, to polish furniture, to get rid of bugs and cockroaches, to cut grease, to take off rust and for a hundred and one other purposes.

Mind you, it is Atlantic Rayolight Oil, not ordinary kerosene, that these thousands of women have found indispensable in their housework, for there's a vast difference. Atlantic Rayolight Oil is refined by slow, careful processes from the very finest crude petroleum. It is always of even quality.

And so it burns without smoke or smell, burns slowly and economically; makes a better lamp of any lamp, and a more effective heater of any heater. But best results—the most heat for the least money—come when Atlantic Rayolight Oil is burned in a Perfection Smokeless Heater.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.
