INDUSTRIAL HEALTH AT WILLIAMSTOWN

Williamstown is crowded with stores and few residents leave here to make their purchases elsewhere. Several hundred persons are employed in these retail houses and with the thousand men employed in the colliery here, there are comparatively few persons remaining who are able to go out of their homes to work in the town's two hosiery mills.

In the mines here hundreds of thousands of tons of coal are mined annually. The men work in 8-hour shifts and are so busy now that they the finding very little time to talk of any possible trouble over a satisfactory agreement between the miners and the operators on April 1. Mine workers in this territory appear to be satisfied in many ways with the present agreement under which they are working and many of them take occasion to praise the operators for what they are doing to make their dangerous work more safe.

"Safety First," Slogan
"Safety first" is a slogan at the mines at the present time and many improvements over the old ways of insuring safety are in vogue.

As dangerous as a miner's work is, its humorous side often presents itself. Cages in which the men are lowered to and raised from the workings hundreds of feet below the earth's surface, are only permitted to carry ten men. Occasionally a fellow, in a hurry to get to his home, jumps into the cage and makes the eleventh man. The engineer refuses to put the machinery in motion and then, of course, the other ten men are delayed. The engineer, as a rule, does not have to request the eleventh man to wait until the next trip. The other ten take care of that. They simply pick up "Mr. Eleven" and drop him out of the cage and he is compelled to wait until the next trip. And then the cage shoots up through the earth for 1,500 feet and the men again reach the open air.

Modern Equipment

Reinforced concrete is being used extensively in the colliery and structural iron is rapidly taking the place of timber in many of the tunnels under ground. In years past the great mass of earth above the tunnels has crushed the timbers intended to support its weight. Structural iron is a decided improvement over wood in this respect.

During the present cold snap there is a decided advantage in being a miner. There are few men employed on the surface of the earth who are able to work these days with only a pair of trousers and a thin shirt to cover their bodies. Yet this is what the miners are doing to-day. The interior of the mine is very warm when extremely cold weather prevails on the surface. During the summer months the workings are cool so that the mining business is probably the only one in existence where the temperature is agreeable to the workmen at all seasons of the year.

Two Large Mills
Williamstown's two hosiery mills

the goods reach south American countries, too.

One of these mills is that of the Unrivaled Hosiery Company, of which J. B. Lesher is superintendent. Men's half hose is manufactured at the rate of almost 1,000 dozen pairs per day. There are 175 persons employed at the plant, almost all of whom are girls. This company also operates a plant at York Haven and the product of that mill is shipped here to be finished and packed so that really 1,200 dozen pairs are handled here daily. The plant was established seven years ago in a small atry from the Atlantic to the Paci turned out daily. Two years ago the owners re-equipped the plant and at the present time plans are being made to use electricity instead of steam for power. This will greatly increase the output of the plant.

At the present time there are seventy-two knitting machines in use, in addition to the other necessary machinery and it is the plan of the company to add more machines in the mear future. This will necessitate the employing of more help.

Williamstown is busy from one end to the other and its leading citizens predict a bright industrial future for the borough.
