

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

WHAT HAPPENED TO JANE

She was still waiting for her husband's reprimand when she went up to the front room which she shared with him.

Then she told herself that a woman had sunk pretty low who sold herself to a man—even if such sale were sanctioned by Church and State.

She hurriedly lighted the lamp. Often she had felt a childish timidity at being in the dark here at night.

She slipped her waist off and glanced at her arm. The marks of Augustus' fingers were still there.

She did not know why, at this juncture, with her eyes upon the crimson finger-prints, she thought of Edward Sanderson.

Perhaps it was nervousness, perhaps it was the remembrance of the love that Sanderson had once had for her that made her smile.

Then, looking up, she saw her husband standing in the door.

"What are you laughing at?" he demanded harshly.

"I was not laughing," she said.

"You are smiling!" he exclaimed, coming into the room.

"Those," she held her arm out that he might see, as if it had been some inanimate thing that had been mangled or defaced.

He caught his breath. "Did I"—he began, then, recovering himself, said roughly.

"Nothing," she replied.

She turned her back to him and started toward the door leading into the dressing room.

"Stop!" he ordered. He laid his hand on her bare shoulder.

"Please don't!" she exclaimed, drawing away.

"I will listen to what you have to say without your holding me." He removed his hand, flushing crimson.

"That it's not true," she said. She had grown deadly pale.

"I went in with Ruth"—she began, but he would not listen.

"Yes, so I heard, and you arranged to have a man meet you there. Went with a girl just to fool me, didn't you?"

"I don't know what you are talking about. I don't know what you are talking about."

He paused, out of breath. Her silence, her pallor were all that answered him.

She Pleads in Vain

"What have you got to say?" he repeated.

"Nothing that you will believe," she answered.

"I believe my own eyes—that's what I believe!" he burst forth.

"The thought of Ruth, of the happiness that had seemed so close only an hour ago, came over her like a flood.

"Augustus!" She took a swift step forward, all her anger gone now, her face lifted pleadingly.

The Center of the Grapefruit World is in the Heart of Florida

Nowhere else is grown such grapefruit, with beautiful skin, palatable pulp, rich flavor and delicious juice. Florida seems to have been ordained by Providence as the natural home of oranges and grapefruit.

Many reliable dealers carry Sealdsweet oranges and grapefruit in season. You can get them for you and will do so if you urge him. Look for the Sealdsweet trademark on wrappers and boxes.

Grapefruit grown in Florida surpass in every good quality—they are juicy, sweet and strength-giving. Nourished in the life-giving sun of the semitropics, tempered by the gentle winds of the Gulf, nurtured by summer showers just at the right time, covered in the morning by jeweled dewdrops and mellowed in the evening by the golden light of harvest moons—Florida grapefruit are food and drink.

Sealdsweet Grapefruit—Surpassingly Good

Sealdsweet grapefruit are tree-ripened, choice and dependable. They are grown by members of the Florida Citrus Exchange, a co-operative body formed to protect consumers against immature, unripe fruit.

Sealdsweet oranges have the same good qualities. They are heavy with juice, delightfully flavored, pleasing to taste and smell, and sweetly delicious, because fully tree-ripened.

Grapefruit and oranges are both food and drink. In cookery and confections they are the housewife's delight. Booklet of recipes telling how and when to use these fruits mailed free on application.

Goods Look As Good As They Really Are

If your goods are inspected under a glaring or tinted light a false impression is bound to be the result. Why not give them a chance under a light which will show their real value?

The new SEMI-INDIRECT Gas Lamps, just out last Fall, give a clear, mellow light without glare. They are the most modern artificial lamps for lighting business places.
