PLAYS AND PLAYERS

In the old days of the melodramas, it was not unusual for some absorbed members of the audience in the gallery to call out and tell the hero that the villain was hiding behind a nearby rock. It was not believed that degree of wrapped attention would ever develop at a picture play, however. Yet, this is just what occurred in a Los Angeles house recently, where "The Red Circle" was being shown.

LOCAL THEATERS

Tonight—Grace La Rue in "The Eternal Magdalene" at the Orpheum. Tomorrow—Edna Goodrich in "Armstrong's Wife" at the Regent. Wednesday—Edna Goodrich in "Armstrong's Wife" at the Regent.

An old, old story told in a new, new way, might be a fitting manner to describe "The Eternal Magdalene," which comes to the Orpheum to-morrow evening.

The theme of Robert McLaughlin's play is as old as history itself, but he has taken it and shown it in a startlingly original and convincing manner. The dramatic and musical elements are of life and its relation to the people we meet with in every day life.

What promises to be a most agreeable musical attraction will be John P. Slocum's production of the merry musical comedy, "Nobody Home," which comes to the Orpheum Wednesday, matinee and night.

It has a story that is really funny and funny in a new way. The music is breathing life into the lines. The plot that keeps buzzing in your ear and that you find yourself whistling all the time. The dancing is a new and original, in the least, and Elsie de Wolf, designer for New York's most fashionable society, has decorated the stage with color schemes which are unique and wonderfully artistic. There are lots of pretty girls who sing and dance and actors who can act.

To-day the Victoria presents the gifted dramatic actor, Jonel Barry, in "Nobody Home," a five-act comedy with romance, thrills and tense human interest. "A Yellow Streak" is produced on an elaborate scale and there are many interesting scenes produced under the direction of William Nigh, who also wrote the story upon which "A Yellow Streak" is based.

A headliner of the "big time" caliber will head the Keith show at the Majestic Theater for the first half of its run. It happens to be the product of his own pen. The scene of the act is laid in a "next to nature" sanatorium, and the laughable situation follows in other in rapid succession.

The attraction at the Regent to-day and to-morrow is "Armstrong's Wife," a shooting featuring Edna Goodrich in the Paramount production. The plot presents May Fielding ("Miss Goodrich"), belle of a country town, who is courted by David Armstrong, her next-door neighbor, and Harvey Arnold, a visiting gambler.

"Fellows, it is your business to keep your hands and eyes off the girls who walk around the streets in high skirts and low-neck gowns!" That was only one of a number of cryptic warnings issued yesterday afternoon by the Rev. William M. Davis, the former local railroad brakeman, in his address on "Safety First."
