Lansford, Pa., Feb. 1.—The famous burning mine fire, which has been raging for over sixty years, and which started at Summit Hill, near the spot where Philip Ginter discovered anthracite in 1791, has burned through the immense wall which the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company placed in front of it deep down into the earth several years ago at a cost of more than a million dollars and is threatening the mammoth vein in the Panther Creek Valley, the largest and richest vein of anthracite in the world. The wall, 100 feet deep and 15 feet thick, is of solid concrete, and experts believed the fire would never eat through it and would prevent it spreading further, eventually extinguishing it.

A large force of men is at work drilling holes deep into the earth, and into these openings water and slush is being poured directly on the fire. Already the fire has destroyed coal valued at millions of dollars, and the damage which will result to the company in case it cannot be extinguished cannot be estimated.
