

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

"Warren, if you haven't anything else to do, would you go down town with me to get some new shoes?" said Helen on Saturday afternoon.

"Thought you had just bought a pair."

"I had, dear, but I can't wear them."

"What's the matter with them?"

"You don't know, I thought they fitted me when I bought them, but they don't; they are too short and wide."

"Where did you buy them?"

"At that little place around the corner."

"Of course, I thought so," said Warren in his "I-told-you-so" manner. "You can't get fitted with feet like yours in a small place like that. I have told you often enough not to buy shoes in a hurry. If a woman's feet look well she looks well dressed all over."

"I know dear, but you pay so much for your shoes."

"I know I do, but I don't buy a pair and then get them home and find they don't fit."

"Well, will you go down town with me to get some?"

"Sure, I will. Get your things on."

Helen got into her suit and put on the shoes that she had bought recently. They were good-looking shoes, in fact Helen had paid a good price for them, but they did not fit, and Helen was very particular about her feet.

"I saw a good-looking pair at Crofts & Ordway's," she confided to Warren in the subway.

"There you go again," snorted Warren. "Why don't you go to a regular place for shoes. A place where they do nothing else but make them?"

"Where, for instance, dear?"

"At Mason's, for instance."

"Aren't they expensive?"

Warren is particular

"Well you needn't worry about that as long as I am going with you. We'll see if they don't get fitted and look well and be satisfied for once."

Helen said nothing more. She knew that Warren would have his own way no matter what she said. She also was of the opinion that she knew no more about shoes than she did. But just because she had made an unfortunate purchase she had no statements to uphold her arguments. She knew that at Crofts & Ordway's she had always bought shoes that satisfied her, but of course if Warren wanted to try somewhere else she certainly might as well be agreeable about it.

The day was perfect, warm and Springlike. Helen was looking well, and because she was conscious of this fact she quite naturally expected Warren to notice it. Several men glanced at her twice and although Warren said nothing she knew that he was not quite unconscious of it.

They went into Mason Brothers, a place Helen had always thought most exclusive, and Warren asked for shoes. An obsequious man came forward and led them to seats, and Helen said immediately:

"Something in high shoes."

"Wouldn't you rather get low shoes this time of the year?" said Warren.

"I would advise you to get high shoes. We are having reductions now, and you can get good bargains," suggested the salesman.

"All right," said Warren submissively, and then turned to Helen as the man went in search of shoes.

"Didn't I tell you that this was some place?"

Helen could not help smiling. She hadn't noticed any difference from the way she was treated when she went anywhere else, but then Warren was sure that this place was the best in the city, and she was willing to be convinced.

"Here is something reduced to $5, one of our regular $11 models," said the man, coming back with a really good-looking pair of shoes, patent-leather with gray suede tops.

"But I don't like button shoes," said Helen. "Have you the laced shoes in the same style?"

Helen Gets a Rebuke

"I think we have. I'll get a pair," and again Warren and Helen were left alone.

"Don't you need slippers for evening?" I thought I heard you say something about it a few days ago."

"I did, dear, but I can get them somewhere else, where things are not so expensive."

"There you are again. I tell you that is false economy. We'll get them right here to-day, and anything else you need. It will certainly give me plenty of satisfaction to see you well shod. I don't mind the money, so don't worry."

Helen liked the shoes the man brought and Warren asked for evening slippers. By the time they left, Helen was the possessor of three pairs of shoes. The shoes that she had seen first, a pair of green evening slippers, and a pair of tan tramping shoes.

"Do you need stockings?" questioned Warren.

"No, Warren, I really don't."

"Women always need stockings. How about a pair for each pair of shoes?"

"That's extravagant, dear, besides I don't wear silk stockings for tramping."

"Might as well have a pair of tan stockings, anyway."

"Yes, three pairs for three-fifty," said the salesman. "Otherwise one-twenty a pair."

"There's your bargain," announced Warren, and Helen said nothing more. Surely she was the loser by this afternoon of unprecedented extravagance. But if she had ever taken it upon herself to buy three pairs of expensive shoes with stockings and slippers in one afternoon, Warren would have called her crazy. It made a difference who thought of it first; that was all.

BELTED COAT FOR A YOUNG GIRL

Fur Cloths Are Adaptable to This Design as Well as Lighter Weights

By MAY MANTON

8825 (With Basting Line and Added Seam Allowance) Girl's Coat, 10 to 14 years.

This is a season of really wonderful cloaking materials. The wool velours illustrated is marvellously beautiful, there are all sorts of similar effects and there are a great many novelties that show stripes of contrasting materials in self color, while the fur cloths are exceptionally attractive. This coat is a very simple one to make, yet it gives the newest and smartest lines. It hangs loose and free, requiring no fitting in consequence. The patch pockets are both convenient and smart. For the school coat, corduroy would be good or frieze or Scotch cheviot or any similar sturdy material of the sort and for the more dressy coat, the wool velours are desirable and any one of the handsome cloakings already mentioned. Since the pattern is the improved one, with basting line and seams, the coat can be cut and made easily and quickly, with assurance of success.

For the 12 year size will be needed 4 yds. of material 36 in. wide, 3 1/2 yds. 44 " 54.

The pattern No. 8825 is cut in sizes from 10 to 14 years. It will be mailed to you address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

OUR DAILY RECEIPT

Kumquat Candies

Kumquats. Two cupsful confectioners' sugar. Chopped nut-meats. Pinch cream of tartar. One-half cupful water. Yellow coloring.

Cut a small slice from the top of the kumquats, scoop out all the insides and place the kumquats in small pieces. Put the sugar into a saucepan, add the strained kumquat juice, cream of tartar and water. Stir till the sugar is dissolved, then boil till it forms a soft ball when tried in cold water; add a few drops of yellow coloring, pour the pan and stir till melted, then pour into the prepared kumquats. Sprinkle with the nut-meats which have been finely chopped.

MILITARY IN SCHELS OPPOSED

Dr. Mullooney, Peace Advocate, Discusses Pros and Cons of Teaching Boys to Shoot

The Telegraph the other day printed a letter which showed the writer strongly and enthusiastically in favor of "teaching the boy in the school to shoot." Here is the opinion of the president of the Harrisburg Arbitration and Peace Society, Dr. John J. Mullooney, whose views are emphatically opposed to military training in the schools. Further discussion through these columns is invited.

The letter in full follows: Paxtang, Pa. Honorable E. J. Stackpole, Editor of the Telegraph, Harrisburg, Pa.

My Dear Friend: I am pleased that the Telegraph has opened its columns to the parents of Harrisburg for a discussion of the subject of military training in the public schools. It is a subject of vital importance and should be considered more carefully by educators and parents.

My training and experience has been such that I would naturally be in favor of anything that was to promote the health and physical well-being of the young people of our city. As a teacher of young men, both in public schools and in a medical college, I would, therefore, be prejudiced, if prejudiced at all, in favor of a system of education which would put great stress on the making of strong and healthy bodies. But my opinion is that while military training or military drill does give a certain degree of bodily exercise it does not give the thoroughness of muscular development which is necessary to produce that perfect symmetry of body which is the result of a liberal education. No man in this country has had larger experience in examining the bodies of young men, and he could be less prejudiced against military training because of moral or religious scruples than Dudley A. Sargent, M. D., director of the Hemenway gymnasium, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., and yet this is what he wrote in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal: "My principal objection to military drill as a physical exercise is that it does not adequately meet the physiological demands of the body. . . . It does not increase circulation to a sufficient extent to secure the constitutional benefits that should be derived therefrom. . . . I dislike to take from the drill one of the most important attributes that has commended it to parents and teachers, but unless I have no other recourse I should maintain that it tends to make him stiff and angular in his movements, as well as to droop and round his shoulders."

"After taking the most favorable view of military drill as a physical exercise, I am prepared to conclude that its constrained positions, and its localized movements do not afford the essential physical development of the muscles, and improving the respiration and circulation, and therefore the general health of the individual of the system. We must further conclude that in case of malformation, or in case of a defective constitution, the drill tends by its strain upon the nerves and prolonged tension on the muscles to aggravate the defects rather than relieve them."

"Finally, if the ultimate object of the drill is to prepare young men for the life and duties of a soldier, we should be forced to conclude that the drill itself would still be defective as a means of preparing the mind and physique for men in that profession. . . . This defect, we are pleased to state, is recognized by the military nations of Europe, and measures are taken to give all recruits from three to twelve months of physical training to develop them as soldiers before they are expected to conform to the requirements of the soldier."

If military training or drill in the schools are as beneficial as some of the belated orators would have us believe, it is not strange that more of the great private schools and academies of this country, schools which are as old as the country itself, and which are free from popular clamor and petty litell intrigue, have not introduced military training into their curriculums. Yet the Phillips Exeter Academy, the Phillips Andover Academy, two of the oldest preparatory schools in the country, and the George Heath school, whose athletic contests are of national fame, have never introduced military drill.

I am in hearty sympathy with Superintendent Downes, of Harrisburg, when he proposes physical training for the boys (and why not the girls, too) of our High Schools, but does not agree with him in his present plan. I would like to urge upon the parents of this land just a word of caution. "Overgrown military establishments are under any form of government, inauspicious to liberty, and are to be dreaded as enemies of the people."—George Washington in his farewell address.

I do not propose to introduce military training or drill into our public schools as an insidious and cunningly devised plan to foist upon this country those "overgrown military establishments" which to-day have made it a seething, bleeding mass of hatred and destruction. I am, Respectfully yours, JOHN J. MULLOONEY, M. D., (President of Harrisburg Arbitration and Peace Society.)

Miss Fairfax Answers Queries

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: A certain young man comes to my house every evening, and takes me to a number of amusements. I do not know him, but he speaks to me as if I were his friend. He never tells me that he likes me, but I am beginning to think a great deal of him. He says he is going to be married next year. Shall I tell him that I like him very much, as I think he believes I do not care about him?

L. L. L. I do not approve of a girl's making advances to a young man if he cares for you there is no reason why she should not indicate it definitely. And if she does not care for him, she should not make an effort to discover what causes your friend's silence. He may be a little shy, but if you are really interested in him, you should not make an effort to break off the affair and let the matter rest. It is not for you to know at once and not waste emotion on him.

NOT PROPER DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: For the past two years I have met a certain young man on the train going to and from business. Coming home the other night he spoke to me and said that he had often hoped that he might be introduced to someone, but not caring to address me without an introduction, he asked me if he might call and I hesitated. I do not know if it would be all right for me to keep up an acquaintance. R. B. D. No, it is not proper for you to continue this acquaintance. It is not even safe, all you know is that you like his looks. Of his character and reputation you have no knowledge.

MAKE ONE EFFORT DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I have been going about with a young man for the past six months. He is very nice, but I do not know how to make an effort to discover what causes your friend's silence. He may be a little shy, but if you are really interested in him, you should not make an effort to break off the affair and let the matter rest. It is not for you to know at once and not waste emotion on him.

Where Does the Money Go? By Dorothy Dix In every household, save possibly that of millionaires, the one eternal conundrum that is never answered is, "Where does the money go?" On a Monday you had in your purse a hundred dollars—fifty dollars—twenty dollars—ten dollars—as the case may be, and on Saturday night you are the possessor of a lone and solitary jitney. You haven't bought any furniture, or clothes, or given a party, or gone on a spree, or been robbed, or done anything that would account for the expenditure. You've got nothing to show for your good money. Yet it is gone, and the question is, how did it go? Answering the question for women, I can say truthfully that most of the money that slips between women's fingers goes for foolishness, just silly little indulgences and fallals that they really don't care for, nor want, and that they waste money on, because they have never really sensed the fact that twenty nickels make a dollar, and that ten dollars make an X spot. For, curiously enough, a woman will hesitate about spending a good round dollar on an article, and then blithely blow in twenty nickels on nothing. When a man contemplates matrimony, he figures out the cost of a wife in terms of French millinery and fine frocks. That's where he misses his guess. It isn't the money that a woman spends on good clothes that plays hob with the family finances. It's the money she wastes on foolishness. The Beauty Shop Take the beauty shop, for instance. A woman drops in to have her hair shampooed. There is fifty cents gone to start with. The girl who is brushing her hair heaves a sigh of startled apprehension, and says, "Your scalp is getting tight, and if you do not wish to get bald and gray, you should begin scalp treatments at once." Bling! Another fifty cents, or seventy-five, if a little electric roller is passed a few times over the Easy Mark's's head. Then comes a wave—seventy-five more, and a face massage, another seventy-five, a manicure at fifty, and a treatment from the chiropodist at a dollar-fifty. Fifty cents is as little as one can distribute in tips, and before she knows it the woman has spent five dollars and twenty-five cents, totally unnecessary, for she could have done her own beautifying at home herself had she had sufficient energy and thrift. Of course, it's a luxury to have all these things done for you, but it explains where lots of the money that women handle goes. The street cars get a lot more of the lost nickels, for the average woman considers it a crime to walk where she can ride, and takes the car even when she is going only a few blocks. That is why street cars can pay dividends on seas of watered stock. There is no earthly reason why the average woman who has to go shopping shouldn't eat before she leaves home. But she doesn't. She stays herself from time to time on sundaes and ice cream, and hot chocolate—always at ten or fifteen cents per stay, even when she doesn't treat a friend—and this just works up to the matter of lunch, and afternoon tea at a smart hotel, where some other dollar or two flits mysteriously from her handbag. Many Other Ways Foolish little treats for the children, silly toys that break within the hour, and stray nickels and dimes to buy everything that every other child on the block has account for much more than vanishes, leaving no trace behind. So do the movies; so cheap that the whole family can afford to go every night. Only ten cents a piece, but when there are five in the family it amounts to fifty cents a night, or three dollars a week. The main way that women's money goes, however, is for jimcracks. Good furniture and good clothes are an investment. They last. They give good service, and they are worth their price, but there is scarcely a house in the land that has not in it hundreds and

BETTER THAN CALOMEL Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Are a Harmless Substitute Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets. These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids. It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place. Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "lousy" and "heavy" and you will feel "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists. Gums shrinking? Danger ahead! Go now to a mirror and examine your mouth? Do your gums look "rimed out," shrunken? Do you see a jagged appearance in the gum-line? If so, see your dentist. He will tell you that you have pyorrhea, and that to save your teeth you will have to fight this dread disease at once. From pyorrhea come by far the greater part of all tooth troubles. Unless treated and checked, it will result not only in the shrinking and malformation of your gums and of the bony structure into which your teeth are set, but in the loss of the teeth themselves. But Senreco does more. It cleanses the teeth delightfully. It gives them a whiteness distinctive of Senreco alone. Its flavor is entirely pleasing, and it leaves in the mouth a wonderful sense of coolness and wholesomeness. Start the Senreco treatment before pyorrhea grips you for good. Details in folder with every tube. A two-ounce tube for 25c is sufficient for 6 weeks' daily treatment. Get Senreco of your druggist today, or send 4c in stamps or coin for sample tube and folder.
