Bowman & Company Openly Challenge the Management of the Majestic Theater

To-day we make public a letter sent yesterday to Manager Hopkins of the Majestic Theater.

March 27, 1916.

Mr. C. F. Hopkins,
Manager Majestic Theater,
City.

Dear Sir:

Following your announcement that Miss Catherine Crawford and her nine models would appear at the Majestic Theater the beginning of this week, the management of this house, after seeing the "Fashion Shop," challenges the statement that this is "Harrisburg's greatest fashion show de luxe."

We have heretofore considered our ability unquestioned in bringing to Harrisburg the world's finest costumes—the most fashionable, most unique—and are still unwilling to have it appear otherwise.

In order to prove this, we challenge you to retain Miss Crawford's act for the week-end and permit us to furnish all costumes worn in every performance; with only one condition, that they be returned in good order.

An array of gowns, hats, lingerie and other apparel to surpass those now being worn by Miss Crawford's troupe would be presented. And still further, we would provide more changes, and even add to the variety of the act.

May we anticipate a prompt reply?

Very truly yours,
BOWMAN & COMPANY.

Easter Styles

Their Importance Becomes More Significant as the Time Grows Shorter

To win the position of unrivaled supremacy in the world of women's garments is indeed an accomplishment; to hold it unassailed is even more. With this presentation we believe that we are offering to the women of this community the most representative of the world's fashions—for to-day New York—our New York is the Queen of Fashion beyond peradventure of a doubt.

Easter Styles—a most circumscribed title, for really every style here is a style of the season, to set the model for the entire Summer, and with marked influence upon the coming Fall, Suits, Dresses, Coats, Blouses and Separate Skirts vie in becoming attractiveness.

You will see at their best, Tailored Suits, Demi-Tailored Suits, Evening and Reception Gowns, Coats for Sport Wear, Coats for Dress Occasions. An important place in this display will be given to Misses', Juniors' and Children's Wear; likewise, to Suits for women of stout build.

Garden Hats: Picture Trimmings

The Hand Painted influence in Garden Hats has spread tremendously in a very short time.

In the new large, drooping hats shown here, painted floral designs on silk constitute the whole scheme of trimming.

Important to know, is the new Cornflower blue now shown in many different shapes—small and large.

materials and because they are not equipped to manufacture sulphite, they are greatly handicapped in turning out paper. Manufacturers of newspaper and other finer grades are especially hard hit and as long as the war in Europe continues there is little or no relief in sight.

ropes, of course, has caused foreign manufacturers to stop sending wrapping paper to the United States and because of this, mills equipped to manufacture their own paper sulphite are swamped with orders.

The York Haven plant, at the present time, is one of the speediest mills in the country and in ten hours, a hemlock or spruce log taken from one of the great piles can be in a freight car and on its way to some dealer in the form of wrapping paper.

1901 and when he first took charge only about thirty tons of paper were finished daily. Now the capacity is more than doubled because of the addition of larger and more modern machinery.

There are very few industries in the country which require so much heavy machinery as a paper mill. In almost every nook and corner of the local plant a piece of heavy apparatus is to be found. Of course mammoth boilers and engines are used and a half dozen high powered turbine water wheels also help to drive the machinery. These engines and turbines total several thousand horsepower.

How Blocks Are Chopped
The spruce and hemlock blocks are put into chipping machines and chipped into small pieces. From the machines the chips are carried to great bins above a set of six "digestors."

is in these "digesters" that the pulp is made. Six thousand gallons of "liquor" and chips from about five and one-half cords of wood are put into each "digester" and then steam is turned in for about six or seven hours. The steam and the liquor "digest" the wood chips and when the mass is blown into an adjoining bin it greatly resembles the paper "spitball" that "Johnny" throws in school.

In the bins great streams of water are turned on the pulp and then it is carried in troughs to machines where it is deposited on wide strips of felt which form an endless chain. The water oozes through the felt and leaves it covered with the wood pulp. This is run between heavy rollers and the excess water is squeezed out, leaving a sheet of pulp as the result. By this process, the pulp can be stored away conveniently or carried easily to the next department or what is properly known as the beating room. In this department there are large tanks and the pulp sheets are dropped in there. Water is turned into the tanks also, together with a paper hardener. Beaters keep the water moving all the time and the tiny fibers are separated from each other. It is at this period of paper making, too, that the dye is used and the various colors seen in papers produced.

The Final Process
After the fibers have been fully separated and well mixed with the water they are carried to the paper making machines in troughs. So much water is used in paper making that when the fibers are carried through the troughs to the paper making machines they cannot be seen in the water. The troughs lead to a great screen made of fine wire and constructed after the style of an endless chain. The water and fibers drop onto the screen, the water dropping through and the fibers covering the surface. The screen, moving in a forward direction carries the wet "sheets" to an endless felt chain and on this it passes over and under at least two dozen huge rollers, each filled with steam. By the time the fibers reach the end of the machine they are dry and the paper is formed. The same machine rolls up the paper and then these rolls are taken to other machines to be cut into ordered and standard rolls such as are found in all places where wrapping paper is used. Of course, some is cut into sheets for delivery.

In addition to the sulphite process of making paper, the company also uses what is called a mechanical process. This is done by grinding the wood chips instead of "digesting" them. The paper is not as fine as the paper made by the sulphite process. The York Haven company, too, is making every effort to protect its workmen and in all parts of the plant guard rails have been placed wherever there appeared to be the least opportunity of a man getting injured.

Shaftings have been boxed and signs have been placed in all parts of the plant, urging employees to be careful. "The best safety device known is a careful man," says one, and another says "Stop! Think!"

The company is taking every possible precaution against fire loss and two great water pumps are constantly in readiness. Fire plugs are located at various points and hundreds of feet of fire hose are always ready for emergency.

But the paper plant is not the only place where employment can be gotten in York Haven. The town can boast of two hosiery mills and both of these are seeking more help. The largest mill is that of the Unrivaled Hosiery Company. This company has branches in Williamstown and Tower City. The local plant employs 40 people, but there are thirty machines standing idle because additional help cannot be secured, at present 116 machines are in operation. The plant's output at present is 1,450 dozen pairs of men's half hose weekly. This will be increased to 2,000 dozens when the new machines are in operation.

VETERAN RAILROADER HERE
Included among the delegates in attendance at yesterday's William Penn Highway conference, was W. T. Young a retired conductor of the Tyrone division of the Pennsylvania Railroad. This veteran started with the company in 1861. He kept a diary of every day he worked for the company up to his retirement a few years ago. Recently a fire destroyed his home and contents, including this diary.
