The opera Lucia was exceedingly well sung, well acted, well staged and well accompanied by an adequate orchestra. There was a smoothness, and balance—a surety of delivery and artistic intelligence which pervaded the whole opera. Angelo Antola as Henry Ashton is especially gifted both vocally and histronically. He has a ringing sonorous voice which he uses admir-ably. He acted the part with ability and understanding, and made a de-cidedly good impression. Edvige Vac-carl, as the unfortunate Lucia, re-vealed remarkable ability in both singing and acting. She made a very attractive, yet appealing figure, and handled her part with authority, and distinction. In the Mad Scene, the varying facial expression, the changes of mood, of vision, of emotion, were clearly and cleverly portrayed. The vocalism was fiexible and colorful. Artistic perception and proportion, to-gether with an abadon and dramatic style made this scene a very great success. It has fallen to our lot co-casionally to hear sopranos shout this scene, or whang it through the nasal cavaties. Tenor of Merit The part of Edgar was taken by

He makes a good figure, acts well, and has vocal resources almost unlimited. His tone has "bite." ring, carrying power and is generally even. He made some telling climaxes. Natale Cervi in the role of Ray-mond, a-chaplain, made a decidedly good impression. He has a voice of some depth and power, and proved a very capable member of the cast. The part of Alice was taken by Alice Homer. She had not a great deal to do, but we heard a voice of consider-able warmth and beauty, and beheld an attractive personality. Antonio Cetti as Norman, and Luciano Rossini as Lord Bucklaw, were both entirely satisfactory in the minor parts alloted to them. The chorus has good tonal quality and balance. They look interested in their work. The costumes are attractive and historically correct.

historically correct. Sextette Foretold The famous sextette was very ef-fectively given, at a proper tempo, and happy to say, with no one voice pre-dominating. The artists were good enough to repeat it. Chevalier Ange-lini conducted the performance from memory in a masterly way. The audience showed much en-thusiasm, but not really quite enough for the high standard of excellence offered. The remaining performances, we can safely predict will be worth at-tending.
