News Now Coming Out of Turkey of Missionaries and Armenians

Eleven Americans Dead and About One Million Armenians Have Perished; Relief Work For Refugees

By THE RELIGIOUS RAMBLER

Fresh news comes simultaneously from three sources concerning the conditions of missionaries and Armenians in and about Turkey. Dr. Cornelius H. Patton, the Secretary of the American Board of Missions, has made a formal and official statement as to the present status of missionaries and American property in Turkey, enumerating the losses in life and buildings.

From the same board has come a somewhat detailed statement of the American interests in the region about Erzerum, where the Prussians are operating. Dr. William E. Strong, the Editorial Secretary of the American Board, has summarized the facts concerning the Armenians down to date, and Professor Samuel T. Dutton, Secretary of the American Committee for Armenian Relief, has reported upon the work that is being done for the succor of the Armenian refugees across the border.

While there is a brighter side to this latest news, especially because of the stream of relief that is increasingly flowing to the Armenians, and because of the steadfastness of the Americans in Turkey, the picture is nevertheless a terrible one.

A MILLION SLAIN

In three paragraphs Dr. Strong, who has all the information of the American Board and of the Relief Committee at his command, summarizes the atrocities and gives the figures of the dead at a million. Here is his story of how the Turkish government undertook to eliminate the Armenian problem: "A practically uniform course was followed in carrying out this project. The leading Armenian men of each town or village—those who were best educated, well-to-do and influential, the strong and substantial representatives of their people, were sometimes without warning, they were robbed and then carried off to be killed or so disposed of that they should not reappear; the women and children and the old and feeble men were next rounded up; on short notice, sometimes without warning, they were compelled to leave their homes and goods, which were promptly seized by rapacious Turks who simply appropriated the vacated dwellings; compelled further to set forth upon a long and unknown trail toward the south and the desert places. Without provision or clothing for the journey, beaten by their guards, abused by the peoples through whose villages they passed, exposed to heat and cold, to storm and the sun's fierce rays, these wretched outcasts were obliged to stumble on till they fell exhausted, starved, sick and dying by the roadside.

"For nearly a year these melancholy processions have been formed and have been strewing the land with the bodies of their helpless victims. A half dozen populous vilayets of interior Turkey have been to a large degree stripped of their Armenian inhabitants. Of the two million which was the estimated number of Armenians in Turkey, it is estimated that one-half have died; that 250,000 more are refugees in Russia, Persia, Egypt and elsewhere; that there are perhaps 500,000 still in the land, mostly women and children left homeless and destitute, besides thousands of the more attractive Armenian girls who were seized from their homes or on the march and carried off to be sold or the possession of Turkish men.

"It is not necessary here to relate the stories of suffering and outrage which have attended this persecution. They are too horrible to be described in detail; too brutal to be believed were they not reported by a host of witnesses. The Turk has been seen to rob and then persistently refuse to give back. He has struck his Armenian subjects indiscriminately, remorselessly and with murderous intent. And he has wrought with a system and persistence quite unlike his usual fiery but unstable self. He has done his best to clear his land of a people whose thrift, industry, patience and growing prosperity made him insanely jealous. He has done it even to his own hurt, as he has robbed his country of its efficient men; from many a city and town the shoemaker, the tailor, the baker, the dentist, the artisan, the banker, all are gone; and the Turks are crying out ruefully, 'Who will work for us?'

"Americans Standing By. If American Board missionaries were war correspondents in the papers these days. For instance, Rev. Robert S. Stapleton has remained in Erzerum all through the siege and since the Russian occupation. His wife, Dr. Stapleton, accompanied her poor and sick people as refugees to Erzingam. These were the only Americans in the city. There is a little hospital at Erzingam, and here one of the missionaries, Miss Zenger, died of typhus a year ago when she went to help in the epidemic that had laid the city low.

Dr. and Mrs. L. S. Crawford have staid by their work at Trebizond, being with the consul, the only Americans there. The nearness of the mission property to the consulate, it is hoped, will have saved it from bombardment.

Bitlis, a city in the fastnesses of Armenia, has figured of late in the cablegrams owing to its capture by the Russians. The American board has three educational institutions here including a Mount Holyoke school. The head of the mission, Rev. George P. Knapp, was forcibly removed by the Turks to Diarbekir, where he died immediately and mysteriously. This left two young women, one of whom had gone to Turkey only in 1913, in charge of the school. Miss MacLaren came down with the Turks. Miss Shane gave a superb exhibition of what an American girl can do in an emergency by nursing her companion, directing the mission, caring for the native Christians and dealing with the authorities. When affairs became too acute, however, the American ambassador sent a government "kavass" to remove the two girls to Harpoot, where they joined the larger station. The Russian troops are headed toward Sivas, an important mission center, where three American women, Miss Willard, Miss Gage and Miss Groffan, have made brilliant history in connection with their dauntless efforts to save the Armenian girls under their charge from the Turkish standing by.

How Missions Stand

The largest foreign investment in the whole Turkish empire is that of the American Board of Missions, which has three million dollars worth of property alone, in the form of schools, hospitals, churches and residences. In addition, of course, is the investment in the support of missionaries. Secretary Patton reports: "The missionaries, 190 in number, so far as reported are all safe, although there has been heavy loss through death. Eleven have died since May. We have lost three of our splendid physicians by typhus fever; Dr. Atkinson of Harpoot, Dr. Thom of Mardin, and the famous Dr. Shepard of Antab, all these have caught the disease from their patients. The loss is irreparable.

"Six of our stations have been abandoned temporarily: Van, Bitlis, Oorfa, Diarbekir, Adabazar, and Bardsouz, the population having been wiped out. At Harpoot, Trebizond, Harsovan, Sivas, Hadjin and Tarsus massacres and deportations have nearly wiped out the Armenian population, but the missionaries remain to care for the aged, the infirm, and the children who are left, and to guard the mission property. It is left to the missionaries to come home if they think best.

"The population having been wiped out, have suffered terribly, but not like the above places. At Talas and Cesarea, where the population is more largely Greek, and where the Governor has been friendly, the work goes on as usual, and the schools are full to overflowing. In Constantinople the deportation has been comparatively slight. At Smyrna the college is in full blast, and doing a greater work than ever. Miss Vaughn remains alone at Hadjin, but is considered to be safe. The Stapletons are alone at Erzerum. There has been no news from the Balkans except Monastir, which reports that the schools have continued without the loss of a day throughout the disturbances incident to the capture of the city by the Bulgarians.

What One American Saw

Some of the American missionaries who have been forced out of Turkey have been chafing to get back for the relief work, and three missionaries, Messrs. W. F. Macallum, Floyd O. Smith and George F. Gracey, have been sent to Tiflis, Russia, where they are working among the one hundred and seventy thousand refugees in the Caucasus region. Dr. Edgar St. John Ward, of Syrian Protestant College, has gone to Aleppo with Red Cross supplies to minister to the Armenian refugees congested there.

Rev. Dr. Samuel G. Wilson, a Pennsylvanian, who is one of the foremost missionaries of the Presbyterians in charge of Persia, has been put in charge of the relief work for the American Committee in Persia and Russia, and he writes a moving letter from Erivan, in the Russian Caucasus. In the district of Erivan alone there are one hundred and five thousand Armenian refugees, besides Nestorians and Yazidites.

and children—without any men. We asked, 'Where are your men?'

"They were all killed."

"Again, 'Of seventy men but one escaped.'"

"Again, 'There were four hundred and fifty households in our village and only twenty or thirty men escaped.'"

"We asked one surviving man, 'How are you here?' He replied, 'I was off as a soldier in the Turkish army. I heard of the massacre. By mountain by-ways I returned to find our village destroyed. I escaped to Russia and found our people.'

Dr. Wilson tells of Caucasus villages of three hundred houses with nine hundred refugees quartered in them. In one region forty thousand died of disease after reaching Russian territory. In one stable he found eighteen persons, a blind youth being the only man. In a hake house twenty-seven persons were quartered, one boy and one very old man being the only males. Of six hundred refugees in one village thirty are men; some of them escaped soldiers. One had concealed himself under a mass of dead bodies.

"There is a terrible uniformity in the tales of suffering and need. The Russian government has appropriated a million and a half of rubles for the Caucasus refugees. The American Committee has sent half a million dollars. The need will continue for months to come, but the most reassuring fact about the latest news is that it is now more possible than ever to reach the sufferers with help.

She Took Quaker Herb Extract and It Saved Her Life

(Special, Middletown, Pa.) Another life saved by that most wonderful of remedies Quaker Herb Extract assisted by the Quaker Worm Candy. The young lady's name is Esther Hickernell, lives at 155 Susquehanna street, Middletown, Pa. For over 2 years she suffered from tortures of a tapeworm, treatment obtained locally and outside cities failed to produce any results. Doctors admitted their failures in the successful treatment of this particular case. Finally she was resolved to call at Martin's Drug Store and learn what the Health Teacher had to say. He recommended the Quaker Treatment and so sure was he that this treatment would produce results that he said: If the Quaker treatment does not produce results within a day no charges will be made for it. Miss Hickernell took the treatment carefully following directions and lo and behold in less than three hours afterwards she expelled the monster tapeworm complete with head. At that moment her life was saved. This cure spread like wild fire and created much excitement in Middletown, she is now being congratulated on all sides for her narrow escape from death. She and all her people at home will also cheerfully certify that her cure is due to the Quaker Herb Extract and nothing else. What do all these cures mean? Why are they published? They mean that the Quaker remedies can be relied upon, that they actually give results even after all other remedies have failed. These cures in other words create confidence in the remedies. Therefore act quickly. If you are a sufferer from rheumatism, catarrh, stomach troubles, indigestion, constipation, kidney and bladder complaints, impure blood or bad circulation call to-day do not lose another moment and learn about these wonderful Quaker Herb Extract three bottles for $2.50 or $1.00 per bottle.
