HOME A Novel

by George Agnew Chamberlain (Copyright by the Century Co.)

Somebody rapped at Alan's door and he called, "Come in." The door opened and revealed Nance, junior. Behind her was a giggling, whispering throng. The spirit of fun danced in Nance's eyes. Her cheeks were flushed and her golden head was in disarray. "Oh, Cousin Alan," she cried, "grandma's given us leave for hide and seek and we're all going to play except mother and grandma and the captain. Please come, too, Cousin Alan."

From behind her came a modified echo, "Pleath do, Couthin Alan." Alan smiled and laid down his book. "All right," he laughed.

Maple House was a rambling abode that had grown and spread like the giant maples that sheltered it. In what age the captain had demanded a wing or some bygone Nance a nursery for her children was chronicled in the annals of the house itself, to be revealed only to the searching, architectural eye. The key to the rambling structure lay in the thick-walled dining room, the parlor, one bedroom and the kitchen.

From the nucleus of these four rooms Maple House had grown, imposed and superimposed, until it overflowed the arbitrary bounds of kitchens and front doors and like some mounded vine rippled off on all sides, in vast living room, sunny nurseries and a broken fringe of broad verandas. There were nooks that were satisfied and held back from further encroachment and there were outstanding corners that jutted boldly out over the sloping lawns and threatened a further raid.

Inside, the paths of daily life ran clearly enough through the maze, but on their flanks hung many a somber den for ambush or retreat. Cavernous closets, shadowy corners, lumbered attics and half-forgotten interstices of discarded space opened dark zorges to the intrepid, and threatened the nervous and unwary with what they might bring forth. The gods of childhood's games themselves could not have guided a better scene for that most palpitating of sports, hide and seek on a rainy day.

Alan soon entered into the spirit of the game. He found himself recollecting things about Maple House that he had more than half forgotten; strange byways under the roof; a vacant chamber, turned into a trunk room because one by one it had been robbed of its windows; and lastly the little attic that had been, as it were, left behind a wall.

Through this dreamland of a hundred children flitted the brood of the

SHAKING HANDS WITH KANSAS

ALL the way across Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania, the hand of one of Kansas' sons—Mr. C. J. Payne, of Wichita—reached out and clasped the hand of this store in true, neighborly fashion.

Our country's great railroad and postal systems have made close neighbors of East and West—the Gulf and the forests.

State boundaries are only back fences.

And this friend just across the way—in Kansas, writes to tell us that our "Spring Clothing" letter had been received and that Kirschbaum Clothes are worn in his town also.

We believe the majority of our closer men neighbors have been in our new Men's Department.

It is here pictured in part, and we regret that the splendid daylight could not be photographed along with the handsome fittings.

Springtime is a good time to get acquainted. Why not a neighborly call now?

Union Temple Is Host at an April Fool Social

Union Temple, No. 49, Ladies of the Golden Eagle, entertained the members of the order at a cleverly arranged April Fool social last evening in the assembly room at Fackler's Hall, Thirteenth and Derry streets. The guests spent a delightful evening in a "house of mystery," enjoying vocal selections by Miss Champion, Herman Attkles, Mr. Latham and Mrs. Wilds, with instrumental selections by Melvin Smith and Miss Violet Champion. After the entertainment there was a pleasant time with songs, dancing and refreshments served to the many members.

The chairman of the committee of arrangements was Miss Mae Genzler, who was ably assisted by Mrs. William Eyrem, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Arnold, Miss Bowman, Mrs. Hall and Miss Holstein.

SUIT HALF CENTURY OLD IS COMPROMISED

Special to the Telegraph Louisville, Ky., April 1.—Litigation began forty-five years ago over a bond issue for a railroad that never was built ended here when Union county taxpayers compromised a suit for $200,000 with the bondholders for $100,000 and paid the smaller sum into court.

Incidentally it is the first time in nearly half a century that a sheriff of Union county has not felt that he might be under the necessity of resigning his office rather than be compelled to collect taxes with which to liquidate the judgment. A number of them did resign rather than oppose their constituents and make the levy.

Clem Stood Before Him Dazed.

day, marshaled rather breathlessly by Clem and Alan. Anxious whispers, the scurrying of lightly shod feet, then a sudden silence but for the furtive counting of some juvenile lit, were followed by sudden screams and a wild race for the goal. Maple House had never countenanced the effete and diluted sport of 1899; it was all for hide and seek where you had to hold your man when found or beat him to the goal.

Great was the excitement when the littlest of all caught Cousin Alan by a tackle around the ankle that spoke a volume of promise for the littlest of its academic career and brought a glow of achievement to his perspiring face. Alan was placed at the newel at the foot of the great staircase and duly admonished in treble voices not to look. The treble voices raised excited instructions on him, carried away by youth's confidence in its ability to teach its grandnother how to suck eggs. Alan started to count slowly in sonorous tones. With a last shriek and the patter of many feet the trebles faded away into silence.

Alan crept stealthily up the stairs. Out of the corner of his eye he caught sight of the twitching jumpers of the littlest, who was too fat to quite fit the retreat he had chosen. But Alan did not quite see until it was too late. The littlest exploded the vast breath he had been holding in and plunged headlong down the stairs. As he rolled by the newel he stuck out a sturdy arm and held fast. He shouted a pean of victory and once more palpitating silence fell on the house.

GERMANS STILL LIKE T. R.

Think Him Mistaken About War, but Rather Have Him President

Special to the Telegraph Denver, Col., April 1.—Judge Ben B. Lindsey acknowledged that while in Germany he had sounded sentiment regarding the feeling there toward Colonel Roosevelt and how the German people would receive a visit from him. Judge Lindsey said:

"In Germany I found the keenest interest in Colonel Roosevelt. One thing that surprised me was that there was much more feeling against President Wilson than there was against Roosevelt. The Germans seemed to be very much hurt over the attitude of Roosevelt on some of the questions growing out of the war. They thought he had been misinformed—that he had been hasty in his judgment—and if he would come to Germany they could change his mind. Many were anxious for me to urge Roosevelt to make a visit to Germany."

"They showed the greatest interest in the possibility of Roosevelt becoming a candidate for President. Many Germans told me that as between Roosevelt and President Wilson, they would prefer Roosevelt."
