DAUPHIN CO. DOES UNCLE SAM FAVOR

Federal Building Not Ready; Courtroom No. 2 to Be Used For Naturalization Hearings

Dauphin county is going to do Uncle Sam a mighty big favor April 19. Wednesday, April 19, Federal Judge Wilmer will hold a session of "naturalization court" and as the list of applicants who want to become citizens and crowns and declare allegiance to Old Glory is the largest that has ever been scheduled, courtroom accommodations of more than ordinary capacity is necessary. Eighty applications have been filed. The alterations to the Federal building won't permit this session to be held in the regular Federal courtroom and accordingly the United States Government asks Dauphin county's permission to use one of the county courtrooms for the purpose.

At the Registrar's Office - Letters on the estates of Dr. J. J. Reed and Joseph Romberger, of Berksburg, were granted to-day by Henry D. and Arthur P. Reed and Mrs. Mary Sophia Romberger, respectively.

Wants $7,000 Damages - Suit for damages aggregating $7,000, was begun to-day by Clifford A. Alleg, a minor, against Albert Alleg, against Cam W. Hargleroad, for damages the youth received when he was struck by a "jitney" owned by Hargleroad.

Divorcee Tries Again - Among the licenses issued at the Dauphin county marriage bureau to-day was the necessary permission to James Eby Drexler and Letitia Green, both of this city. Drexler is first husband, age 31. She divorced her first husband in 1905; her second spouse died in 1910.

PEIROSE WARNS OF THE CRISIS

Says That Trained Man Is Needed to Handle Problems at the White House

Senator Boies Penrose in a remarkable speech at the banquet of the Young Republican Club of Lancaster in that city last night gave warning that the country was approaching a crisis and that a trained executive, one with a knowledge of legislative and administrative affairs from long experience, was needed at the helm. The senator declared that in such an emergency it was the duty of Republicans to unite for the welfare of the country and that this was not the time when factionalism should be allowed to show its head.

In his speech as presiding officer Lieutenant-Governor McClain paid a high tribute to Senator Penrose. Public Service Commissioner W. D. E. Riney, who has been the active speaker, was unable to reach Lancaster. The banquet opened the campaign in Lancaster county.

Not since the Civil War has the Republican Party faced such grave responsibilities as will confront us in the approaching national campaign.

In the announcement of principles and the selection of candidates for the national convention which will assemble in Chicago in June the Republican party must subordinate personal interest or petty conflict of opinion that stands as an obstacle to the performance of its duty. Never before has there been more pressing need for a party convention and it will represent the best thought and broadest-minded opinion of the Republican voters of the nation.

With opportunities of intimate knowledge of the movements in the party I am glad to be able to say that this aim seems to be paramount from one end of the country to the other among Republican leaders. The feeling prevails that this is not the year to force the candidacy of any individual; in fact, it may be stated with accuracy that there are no candidates at the present time for the nomination in the usual acceptance of the term.

"The Republican party contains within its ranks many trained and resourceful statesmen, and the qualifications should be a matter of careful canvass and consideration by delegates. One thought seems to stand out and that is that the country will require the executive office a man of training and intimate familiarity with the business of the Federal Government and with its diplomatic and international relations."

This declaration was received with a noisy demonstration of applause. "This is not the time," continued Senator Penrose, "to trust these vast responsibilities to anyone who is not an expert in governmental matters. Blunders in high office are bad enough at any time, but they may be fraught with untold disaster if committed in this crucial hour of the nation's general sentiment of the Republicans of the United States is that the delegates to the National Convention should be unpledged and uninstructed."

An effort has been made, so far as I can observe from a consideration of the very large number of delegates already elected, to have successful business men and political leaders of several districts and States go as delegates to the convention.

"I think any person will admit, if he will scan the list of delegates already elected, that the list is a very good one. It is gratifying that such should be the case, and everyone who is impressed with the gravity of the situation will realize that the national alignments and partisan efforts visible in different sections of the country the result, indeed, would be unfortunate. The contrary, however, is the case. It is hoped that the whatever factional divisions may unfortunately have existed in the past are rapidly disappearing if they have not entirely passed away.

Republican Party which occurred in 1912 is now happily being healed. Republicans are coming together with the single thought of saving the country from the ignominy of incompetence and the firmness of the Wilson administration. It did not require any conference or political arrangement to bring about this result. It is the natural course of the Republican party, determined on a common object and associating together in a harmonious spirit with high purpose to save the country.

Any one at this time in any State of the Union who could attempt by factional or other obnoxious methods to force a candidacy or create a condition calculated to make here and there the ranks would be very generally condemned and repudiated by the Republicans in the country at large."

bottles of liquor that they had secured at Guerrero and Minaca and got pretty drunk before they were through. "They rode the American soldiers and boasted about the way they had fooled the 'gringos' by sending guides to the American officers with stories of different places in which he was hiding. They talked about Lopez and said he was dying and that soon as he was dead the 'gringos' would be told it was Villa and then they would all go home."

El Paso, Texas, April 12.—Masking his trail with a deluding fiction spread broadcast by Mexican agents that he had died of his wounds, Francisco Villa is thought by Mexican military officers to be safely hidden away to the west in the Madre mountains while the American cavalry are pursuing a rear guard band of Villa bandits whose strategy it is to begethe Villa's pursuers away from the hiding place of the bandit leader.

Mexican followers of Villa say it was a favorite trick of the bandit leader, when the chase became hot, for him to have the story spread that he was dead, so the ardor of his pursuers might be dampened.

Brigadier-General Pershing has established a new base at Satevo, according to information here, but no word has come from the flying columns of American cavalry under command of Colonels Dodd and Brown, whose pursuit of the Villa forces is said to have extended beyond Parral.

Spectacular Ride of Lieutenant Myer to Warn Squadron Thrills Men

Pershing's Camp at the Front in Mexico, April 5, by aeroplane and motor courier to Columbus, N. M., April 12.—The ride of Lieut. Albert Myer, of the Seventh cavalry at the Guerrero fight, when Colonel George A. Dodd caught the Villa forces for the first time, was described here to-day by an officer from Dodd's column who brought dispatches to the headquarters Camp Lieut. Myer rode from New York, a grandson of the former chief signal officer of the United States army.

During much of the fight Colonel Dodd had a position on one of the hills which form a bowl about the town of Guerrero. A mile and a half from this hill Colonel Dodd saw some Villa troops numbering possibly one or two hundred, flying stealthily through a ravine. Moving in their direction, but in such a position that they might not see the Villa men, was Major Tompkins' squadron of the Seventh cavalry. It seemed a chance for the Villa force to take the squadron on the flank and Colonel Dodd ordered Lieut. Myer to carry word to Major Tompkins of the bandits' movement. Myer rode a horse conspicuously marked with white. Between him and Major Tompkins lay a mile of open field, swept by the fire of snipers. Lieut. Myer made the distance at a run, jumping ditches, dodging boulders and leaping fences. The ride thrilled the officers who were watching. The messenger reached the American squadron in time to warn them of the bandits' position.

case in conjunction with the Federal authorities and ever since the arrest of Phipps and the disclosure of a possible system in use in Harrisburg the city detective has been gathering important evidence on the case. Just where the investigations will end the authorities are unable to say at present, except that more arrests are looked for which will bring to light the methods used in Harrisburg to evade the Federal anti-drug laws. With the big disclosure after the arrest of William Phipps, after a woman's husband followed her to his home in Bailey street, evidence has been accumulating which will aid greatly in breaking up the alleged illegal practice in Harrisburg.

It Was No Miracle, But Ordinary Results Received From Quaker Herb Extract

(Special Allentown, Pa.) Mrs. J. Long, who lives at 631 N. Twelfth street, for over six years, suffered from stomach trouble. She was subject to terrific headaches, pains in different parts of her body, was very restless at night, distress would follow everything she ate and every hour of her life was miserable. The fact that medicines did not help her made her a veritable nervous wreck on the verge of prostration as well as her husband, friends and neighbors anticipated her early death. Yet to-day Mrs. Long is entirely well, free from pain, healthy, hale, hearty and strong in every respect and improving in weight every day. It is this quick, complete transformation which has created this immense excitement in Allentown and cause many to consider her cure a miracle. It certainly looked like it, but here are the real facts of the matter.

Mrs. Long sent for a bottle of the wonderful Quaker Herb Extract. She took only a few doses when she expelled a big tapeworm. This worm had been the real cause of her sufferings and Quaker Herb Extract by removing the cause naturally cured her. So it was no miracle. Similar cures here in Harrisburg are very common.
