Little Monte Carlo

Novelization by Hugh C. Weir. Plot by George Bronson Howard. Copyright Kalem Company.

"Thank you," said Stanley, as Holbrook grudgingly gave him the check. "Here are your memoranda." Holbrook stopped Mona for a moment as she was going out. "Tonight," he whispered. She nodded. And then she went out with Stanley, and they turned to one another with a laugh. It was not long before they had cashed Holbrook's check. Stanley with his reward for the entire satisfied, and Mona with the rest of the money, hurried to Mary, who was delighted.

"Fair look!" said Mona. "I've got my idea now, Mary. Look at this letter he got from his father!" "Does he mean to get married?" asked Mary, after she had pieced the letter together and read it. "Of course not—it was just a trick to get more money!" said Mona. "But—" "Let me think!" said Mary. "You're right, Mona—you must be! There must be some way we can turn this to account!"

"I knew you'd be able to think of something, Mary! That was why I got the pieces of the letter!"

It was an eager young man, determined to forget his job in the matter of the I. O. U., and to make up for that by his conquest of Mona, who went to the apartment he had taken. He let himself in, and called, as soon as he was inside the door, "Betty!"

An old suit case was there on the floor, and there were evidences that someone had been in the room, for he tore aside the curtains that hid the other room. It was empty! Save for a note. "When you boast about any girl," he read, "be sure you know the girl."

He went back to his own apartment in a black rage. And then, to increase his anger, he found Stella waiting. Stella Worth, the girl he had cast off in a moment of tenderness at the sight of her—she had trusted him so fully, she was so different from this other girl!

"What do you want?" he snarled.

"Oh, Charley," she said, pleadingly. "My dear—aren't you going to be fair to me now?"

"Fair to you?" he mocked. "You've got no claim on me!"

"There's a reason," she faltered. "Charley—can't you understand?"

He had decency enough in him to be affected by the revelation—and to realize that she was what he should always have believed her to be—a good girl. But he was not decent enough to be willing to make the only amends that were in his power. Even while he stared at her, however, there was a knock at the door. He answered it and received a note from his father.

"Call tomorrow and bring your wife to me."

"Have decided to increase your allowance if you marry at once."

Holbrook stared at the letter in dismay. And then he looked up and saw Stella, trembling, tearful. Suddenly he saw a way out!

"Stella," he said, "I've behaved like a beast to you, my dear. I can see it now. Would you marry me again? She could not speak; she could only throw herself in his arms.

"He rushed out. And in a little while Stella took the telephone and called for Mona and Mary. It was Mona who answered. "Oh—yes—he's going to marry me," said Stella. "But I'm so afraid of what he'll say when he finds out—" "He'll say nothing," said Mona. "Because I've written him to explain it all—and to let him know that he's done the only thing that would reconcile him with his father, too. You wait, Stella—I believe he'll settle down, now and turn into a pretty decent sort of husband in spite of everything! And I know you're going to be good!" Then she hung up.

"He may not stay reformed," said Mary to Mona. "I think he's a bad egg. But it was worth doing, anyhow. We collected some of our bill—and we made that little girl happy! That was worth doing, Mona."

Heavy Storm Does Great Damage in York and Adams

Special to the Telegraph. York, Pa., April 22.—A violent wind, rain and hail storm passed over York and Adams counties yesterday afternoon. Barns were unroofed, trees uprooted and much damage done.

Among the barns damaged in York county were those of John Martin, Adam Hoffman, Samuel Ziefow, Harry Spangler and Joseph Martin. The Western Maryland railroad freight station at Nashville was wrecked and six box cars on a railroad siding at Thomasville were blown from the tracks and partly demolished. Hail stones did some damage to fruit trees.

At Gettysburg hail stones the size of cherries did considerable damage and the heavy rain flooded houses in the lower part of the town.

PHYSICIAN'S AUTO STOLEN

Special to the Telegraph. Waynesboro, Pa., April 22.—While Dr. James A. Black, of Chambersburg, was on a professional trip to Bedford and had parked his car on one of the side streets a thief drove away with it.

MISSIONARY CONGRESS

Special to the Telegraph.

Washington, D. C., April 22.—The National Missionary Congress which opens in this city Wednesday, April 26, will be one of the most momentous religious gatherings since the World Missionary Conference in Edinburgh in 1910. It is the closing of a series of 69 great conventions in the leading cities of the United States, to which more than 100,000 men were delegates.

Religious leaders regard the gathering as a potential event. The assemblage will face new world conditions of opportunity and need and is expected to exert a profound influence on the missionary activities of the next ten years.

League Island likely to Get Big Drydocks

Washington, April 22.—Two drydocks to be built on the Atlantic coast are favored by the House Naval Committee. One, 1700 feet in length, will be constructed at the Philadelphia yard, and the other at Norfolk, two of the Government's best yards, upon which vast sums will be expended in the coming year to equip for battleship building and for repair stations. Philadelphia will also be the site for the naval laboratory, and has good prospects of receiving the proposed armor factory.

It became known yesterday that the House committee had decided upon these projects, announcement of which
