REAL LOVE MAKING INNOVATION WAR HAS BROUGHT TO FRANCE

Romance Has Taken Place of Finance to Big Help of Cupid; Marriages Increasing

Correspondence of the Associated Press—Paris, April 25.—Genuine courtship—real love-making—as an incident to marriage is one of the innovations that war has brought to France. It may develop into a revolution of the marriage system, and is almost certain in any case to be the death of much of the red tape that has entangled, and more or less strangled, cupid.

Marriage was hard hit during the first months of the war, but by reason of the authorizations of unions by proxy and the infusion of war romance, it is rapidly recovering.

In Paris there were only 768 marriages in January 1915 as against 2,341 in January 1914. In December 1915 there were 1,293, showing a remarkable recovery under the circumstances.

In a great many of these war marriages, it is noticed that girls without fortune are for the time being running their more favored sisters a close race, since in a great proportion of the marriages celebrated since hostilities began the marriage contract has been dispensed with; no mention of dowry present circumstances is bound to be sympathetic.

Some psychologists have inquired whether there was not in France a crying need for deeper affection, and whether the decreasing natality in the country was not due in great part to the obstacles to marriage and the material considerations that always entered into it. The soul-stirring incidents of the war have unquestionably brought everyone into closer union and there seems to have been a general wiping out of the old scores that kept acquaintances and even families apart. There have been many reconciliations through the exchange of news of the exploits of mutual friends, and many instances of divided families reunited over the tomb of a fallen hero.

Young people are now being brought together not by constant nor by the attraction of wealth, but simply by the greater force now asserting itself of young hearts and common will. It is asked whether it will continue after the war, and what effect it will have on the future of France; an idealistic people, after being held in materialistic bondage so far as concerns so vital a question to the race, is committing itself to romanticism that many believe it will result in a transformation, if not in a revolution, of the marriage system. Some contend that men will marry younger and marry for love instead of for money, will marry more in reason and sincerity, and that the stronger tie of affection taking the place of interest, divorces will become fewer, while the population will grow correspondingly more numerous.

MEXICAN CHAOS NOT TAFT LEGACY

(Continued From First Page) Taft did not recognize General Huerta as President of Mexico and replied to the assertion that President Wilson inherited the troublesome Mexican situation from his predecessor. Senator Penrose declared the management of international affairs in the case of Mexico constituted one of the most deplorable chapters in our diplomatic history.

In his speech Mr. Knox said in part: "The purpose of my remarks upon this occasion is to reply to the assertion that President Wilson inherited the Mexican situation from President Taft, to answer why President Taft did not recognize Huerta and to negative the assertion that the policy of the Wilson administration toward Mexico during the last three years is similar to that of President Lincoln during the period that preceded the establishment of the Maximilian Empire in the early sixties."

"It has been asserted time and again by the apologists for the Democratic blundering in Mexico that President Wilson inherited the Mexican situation from President Taft. Nothing could be further from the truth than this statement, as a review of the situation will conclusively disclose.

"When President Taft assumed office on March 4, 1909, Mexico was at peace. Her credit was good, her coffers filled, her industries thriving, and Porfirio Diaz, who has been Constitutional President of the Republic since Lerdo de Tejada, seemed fair for the remainder of his life to preside over the destinies of the land he had done so much to free from the empire of Maximilian, set up by a coalition of European Powers.

"The Madero revolution broke out some years later and resulted in driving Diaz from power. Although the Madero regime was recognized by the United States and the other Powers, it was not accepted by powerful factions in Mexico. Rebellion against its authority was almost coincident with its birth and, finally, in February, 1913, General Felix Diaz carried the war against Madero to the streets of the capital city itself.

"When it was apparent that Madero's downfall was imminent, it was made certain by Huerta and a portion of the army going over to Diaz, who then seized the palace on the 19th of February, 1913. Francisco I. Madero and Jose M. Pino Suarez resigned as President and Vice-President, respectively. Their resignations were in writing and copies were transmitted to foreign powers sustaining diplomatic relations with the republic and also to the Mexican Congress then in session. This was the Congress elected at the same time that Madero was elected President, the election having taken place subsequent to the success of the Madero revolution.

"Of course, Francisco Madero resigned under the compulsion of the revolution led by Felix Diaz, just as Porfirio Diaz had abdicated shortly before under the compulsion of the revolution led by Francisco Madero. But there was nothing startling, unusual or un-Mexican in that fact. During a period of 40 years preceding Porfirio Diaz's accession to the presidency there had been some 30 odd governments in Mexico, presided over by some 70 odd individuals. Sensible persons have no illusions about the stability of government in Mexico.

"When Madero resigned, on February 19, 1913, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, under the Mexican Constitution, became Pedro Lascurain. He appointed General Huerta Minister of War. The Minister of Foreign Affairs then resigned and the office devolved on Huerta, and this was on February 19, 1913.

"It is important to mark these dates. "It has been attempted, with a great measure of success, to make the American people believe that Huerta became President through Madero's death. Perhaps 90 per cent. of intelligent Americans so understand it. But this is not true. Huerta became President through Madero and Lascurain's resignations. Madero's death did not occur until some days later. "The main questions involved in determining whether or not to recognize a government seeking recognition are these: Is the requesting government able and disposed to comply with the rules of international law? Will it respect the obligation of treaties and the ethical rules of comity observed by self-respecting nations? Will it recognize, respect and protect the rights of foreigners residing within its borders?

"In view of the unhappy experience of the preceding two years in dealing with the Madero administration, in our efforts to protect Americans in Mexico and to adjust diplomatically important national questions at issue with the Mexican government, it was deemed expedient to ask some assurances upon these subjects. "There had been for a number of years some very important unsettled questions between the United States and Mexico, and much irritation existed because of Mexico's inability or unwillingness to adjust them. The disposition of the waters of the Colorado river was one of these questions. Sovereignty over the Chamizal tract, which includes a most important section of the city of El Paso, was another.

A set of new questions had arisen out of the outrages perpetrated upon Americans during Madero's administration, for which we could obtain no redress judicially or by executive action. Besides, there was the vast question as to the creation of a commission to assess damages due Americans for losses sustained during the various revolutions of the preceding years. As to all these questions we requested of Huerta and his Government some assurances of their speedy and satisfactory adjustment, and while awaiting his reply the 12 days slipped away. Mr. Taft ceased to be President, Mr. Wilson assumed office and this is why the Taft administration did not recognize Huerta.

"What Mr. Wilson inherited from Mr. Taft was an outstanding, unanswered diplomatic request to the de facto government at Mexico City for definite assurances for the security of American rights and the adjustment of claims as a preliminary to the consideration of the question of recognition. What Mr. Wilson did was to repudiate the policy of his predecessor, in this as in all other things, and create a situation that made the adjustment of American rights impossible."
