WOMEN'S INTERESTS

THE STRUGGLES OF A WIFE

By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XXVI (Copyright, 1916, Star Co.)

Horace Webb, climbing the steps to his apartment, met his daughter coming downstairs.

"Hello!" he greeted her, "Where are you off to?"

"I'm going to dinner at the Dakin's," she explained. "Isn't it a beastly night?"

"Well, the snow has stopped, but it's very cold," he told her. "Are you warmly wrapped?"

"Yes—and I can take a car at the corner to within half a block of the house," Grace replied. "All the same—I wish I could afford a taxi."

"Good night!" her father said, going upstairs.

Any reference to their reduced circumstances always silenced him, his daughter reflected as she went on her way. She did not wonder.

She had reached the corner and was standing in the biting wind waiting for an uptown car, when an automobile slowed down at the crossing near her. She stepped to one side to let it pass, and as she did so the driver, catching a glimpse of her face, threw on his brakes so suddenly that his machine swerved and slid past her before it stopped.

She saw him lean out, but she pretended not to see him. In the instant when he was abreast of her she had recognized Henry Dayton, a man she had met a year ago at a dance and whom she had not seen since.

She had not forgotten him, as his was the type of face not easily forgotten. Now she recalled vividly the only talk he and she had had together. He had seemed to her especially delightful and she had almost thought him extremely good-looking.

Only a Memory

He belonged, however, to the days that were gone, she reminded herself, just as Max Courtney did. Even more so, in fact, for Courtney was a man in whose circumstances who wanted to marry a rich girl, while Dayton had means of his own and was considered by designing girls and their mothers a most eligible party. Now that she was poor, she did not want to seem to seek him out.

Therefore she stood with her side turned towards the automobile, intent on watching the coming trolley. She was glad to see the Broadway car approaching rapidly, and stepped forward to meet it.

Neither by word nor look had she given any evidence that she had seen the automobile nor that she was aware that the man who was her partner at a dance a year ago was climbing from his seat with the intention of asking her to allow him to drive her to her destination.

Yet she had a wounded, bitter feeling as she took her seat in the trolley car. She thought of the many young people who had been at that dance, and of how completely most of them had dropped out of her life.

Meanwhile Horace Webb had reached his apartment. His wife met him in the hall, for she had heard his latchkey as it turned in the lock.

"Good evening, dear," she said. "You and I are dining alone to-night. Grace is out."

"I met her," he replied. Then he kissed his wife, hung up his hat and coat and went on into his own room to change his shoes.

"Let me get your slippers for you," Myra urged. "I have them warming by the radiator."

"Thanks," he acknowledged, taking them from her.

She stood watching him as he unlaced his shoes, removed them and put on his slippers. She hoped he would say that the warmed footwear felt good to him, but he did not mention the fact.

He is Taciturn

Throughout dinner she did all the talking, an occasional comment from her husband being her only reward. She knew he was brooding deeply, and that he was probably wondering what she had been doing at the restaurant.

If this was the subject of his meditations, why did he not ask her the question outright? She resolved that she would not be the first to introduce the subject.

By a loving wife's resolutions are more easily made than kept.

By the time that Horace had finished his dinner and gone into the living-room his silence had become well-nigh unendurable to the woman who loved him.

It was not alone that she wondered who the girl was who had been with him. She assured herself that she was too proud to ask him about her. Yet why did he not give her some explanation?

She went quickly into the living room. She could not defer the talk. She felt that the facts lay like a barrier between Horace and herself, and it was her duty to lower this barrier.

Your Car's Life Fluid

Impoverished blood soon puts a man out-of-the-running. Impoverished gasoline will do the same thing to a motor. Good gasoline has got to be more than something that flows through a brass screen, smells and costs money. Now, perhaps more than ever before, motorists must beware of mongrel fuels. Despite market conditions, the uniform boiling-point that made Atlantic Gasoline famous is steadfastly maintained. We couldn't afford to alter that, even if we would. Buy Atlantic by name.

PINCHOT LOSES POWER FIGHT

National Conservation Congress Throws "My Policies" Out Bodily

Washington, D. C., May 4.—"My policies," fathered originally by Colonel Roosevelt and nurtured recently by Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, and James R. Garfield, of Ohio, were carried out on a stretcher from the National Conservation Congress, where they were born ten years ago.

The National Conservation Congress for many years has been considered the exclusive property of Mr. Pinchot, former chief forester of the United States. At the convention of the organization now being held in Washington Mr. Pinchot made a vain fight to have the delegates endorse the Roosevelt-Pinchot conservation policies.

LONDON EXPORTS INCREASE

By Associated Press London, May 4.—Figures collected by Consul General Skinner show that exports from the port of London to the United States during the first four months of the year 1916, increased $13,000,000 over the corresponding period of last year. The increase was due chiefly to the diversion of trade caused by the British blockade.

Special to the Telegraph Washington, D. C., May 4.—Colonel John S. Mosby, famous Confederate guerrilla leader in the Civil war, is ill in a hospital here. He is more than 82 years old, and his condition was said to be more the result of old age than of any particular ailment.

Cars Collide; Brave Motorman

Wet rails last night caused a fear and collision of a Rockville and a Second street trolley car at Second and Forster streets. M. E. Cleland, motorman on the Derry street line, after racing his car beside a runaway horse for two blocks, suddenly stopped his car in front of the animal, dashed out and stopped the horse.

SOME PROFITABLE HOBBIES

screening. In the center is a branch of a tree, in which there are a couple of nests, and the floor is covered with fresh gravel which is changed every morning. The floor itself is of galvanized iron which the breeder finds much easier to keep clean than the original wooden boards.

After the first pale green or blue egg appears, it is necessary to watch carefully the mother bird, for sometimes it seems to cause her a great deal of annoyance and she will peck at it or roll it out of her nest. This catastrophe may be anticipated by removing the eggs from the nest with a spoon as soon as they are laid. When the third egg has been removed for a short time it is generally safe to return them all to the bird, who then lays her fourth egg and sits dutifully upon them for thirteen days, when they begin to hatch.

Occasionally, birds will show a decidedly cannibalistic appetite and eat their own eggs, which is the sign that their daily food is not rich enough. During the breeding season, especially, birds should be fed a paste of boiled egg and cracker in addition to their regular food.

DUST RAISED BY SWEEPING FULL OF DISEASE GERMS

Dust is the home of disease germs, and every time you spread this dust by sweeping they fill the air. Much sickness is caused in this way.

There is a new way to sweep, however, without raising dust and all doctors who know it endorse it.

You simply spread a powder called Nomordust across the room, then sweep it ahead of you as you go. Not a particle of dust will arise.

No need for a dusting cap with Nomordust—no need of covering your ornaments—in fact, you can dust them before you sweep, then leave them exposed and they'll be as clean as before you started.

Nomordust is a great time and labor saver. You can clean any room in half the time it now takes and you only have to sweep half as often, because you get your rooms so much cleaner each time. Makes rugs look new—equally good for wood floors and linoleums.

Take the advice of physicians, collect the dust—don't spread it—particularly if you have children, for they are most easily affected by germs.

Get a 10c can of Nomordust to-day and try it. Money back if not more than pleased.
