

HUSBAND OBJECTS TO OPERATION TO OPERATION

Wife Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Des Moines, Iowa.—"Four years ago I was very sick and my life was nearly spent. The doctors stated that I would never get well without an operation and that without it I would not live one year. My husband objected to any operation and got some of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it and commenced to get better and am now well, am stout and able to do my own housework. I can recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman who is sick and run down as a wonderful strength and health restorer. My husband says I would have been in my grave ere this if it had not been for your Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. BLANCHE JEFFERSON, 703 Lyon St., Des Moines, Iowa.

Before submitting to a surgical operation it is wise to try to build up the female system and cure its derangements with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it has saved many women from surgical operations.

35,000 In Harrisburg Have Stomach Trouble

NEW YORK SPECIALIST ADVISES WHAT TO EAT TO AVOID INDIGESTION

A well known physician recently made the startling statement that a careful estimate shows that fully 50 per cent. of our population are sufferers in some degree from dyspepsia or acid indigestion. The chief trouble, states the doctor, is that the public does not accept this condition with sufficient seriousness. "If 50 per cent. of the people in your city," he continues, "had just been exposed to smallpox the whole city would be panic-stricken. Yet such exposure probably would not cause nearly as much misery as might be caused, in time by complications arising from the mild cases of dyspepsia that are being neglected right at this minute. Our stomachs, as we grow older, secrete too much acid which prevents the proper digestion of food. Bloating, belching, sourness or heavy lumpy feeling follows and we foolishly adopt the habit for forcing the sour, burning food contents of our acid stomachs into the intestines by means of some peppin pill or other artificial digestant. This process means that we fail to properly nourish and strengthen from our improperly digested food and in time the weakened stomach that is irritated and inflamed stomach, tortured beyond endurance will stretch or dilate on a falling of the stomach may occur. Dangerous stomach ulcers which so often lead to cancer are nearly always accompanied by stomach acidity. What every acid stomach needs and should have daily is disurated magnesia, a teaspoonful of which taken in a quarter glass of hot or cold water after meals, has the effect of making our stomachs more acceptable to the stomach, to sweeten the stomach and instantly neutralize or dissolve all the excess acid. My advice to stomach sufferers is to avoid freak diets, keep right on eating nutritious foods even though they have not always in the past agreed with you but to make it a regular practice to take a little disurated magnesia in water after meals. This advice when faithfully followed almost invariably will put an end to indigestion and add a new member to the happy family of normal painless digestion. The pure disurated magnesia which differs from all other forms of prepared magnesia, with which it is occasionally confused, can be obtained in sealed glass bottles from any leading druggist in the city or vicinity.—Advertisement.

Mary it was who attended to this, and did it, too, without letting the agency suspect that either she or Mona was concerned in the matter in any way. And Mary, with a sober face, studied the report. "He lends money—as well as getting it by blackmail," she said. "He's very rich—and oh! He keeps a lot of money and jewels as well at his place—he's afraid of banks. I don't wonder, I suppose he knows that one of his victims may turn on him at any minute, and that he may have to make a break for his freedom. And here—you remember what Clyde said about the women?"

"He was awfully nice—he was afraid we'd be shocked." "Yes, it is nice to have men considerate again, isn't it? We've had enough experience with the other sort! But here—it goes into that in detail here. It seems he's rather mad about sex, my dear. Now I know we can handle him! A man like that was bound to have a weakness, and that's one we can play on."

"It's risky work, Mona." "I'll take the risk. I'm nasher than you are, though a man who had any sense wouldn't hesitate a minute to choose you. So I'll be the victim of his sixty-year-old charms—only I won't!"

"For a Pretty Woman Like You I Might Do Things," Cackled Reynolds.

"How are you going to manage it?" "Don't know yet—I've got to see him first. One thing I've learned is that it doesn't do to map out a lot of plans ahead, before you know the people you've got to deal with. They won't work, and you tend to stick to them, despite yourself. It's better to approach a thing like this with an open mind, if you can manage to do it. It seems to me I've got a widow's outfit somewhere in our trunks, if I can find it. I think that's just the thing for my call on old Reynolds tomorrow."

They moved away from the Grand Hotel that day. Much as the two girls liked it, they realized that it was not the best place to use as headquarters during such a campaign as they now planned to execute. And it was from a small furnished apartment, in a house and a quarter where no questions were asked, that Mona, in widow's weeds, set out for the suburban home of old Reynolds—Thomas F. Reynolds, as the agency had disclosed his full name to be.

When she saw him it was all Mona could do to force herself to go through with her plan. He was fully as repulsive as she had feared. He had led her to expect. His very fastidiousness with regard to his person made him more repulsive than she had feared. As he spoke he squeezed her arm, slyly, and Mona had hard work to repress the shudder that ran through her frame.

"Oh, I hope you will, Mr. Reynolds!" she said, tearfully. "I simply must have money. I've none at all—and no place to stay." "Well, well, that's too bad!" he said. All the time she realized that he was appraising her, weighing her charms, in fact. "But I'm very short just now, my dear—very short. Business is bad. Still—I'd like to help you. I don't know about a loan—that would be hard to manage. But—ah, I have it!"

"Yes?" she said. "I need a housekeeper! I've just had to dismiss the one I had—a hussy, my dear, and that's the truth! I could give you the place. That would give you a place to stay where you'd be comfortable. And I could pay you something—"

Mona pretended to hesitate, but she was overjoyed. He had received her in his office, and she was already studying his safe. And so, dubiously, she consented. Reynolds did not give her a chance to change her mind. He sent for his servants at once, and introduced her as their new mistress. Mona shivered as she saw the way the maids looked at her. They understood!

HOW TO DEVELOP INITIATIVE

It is certainly essential that we should cultivate initiative in all of our people, but it is equally important that a man should understand that his initiative is valuable only when he knows what other people have already accomplished in that direction. The necessity for this is made evident every day by the great number of people who go to patent lawyers with devices which are obsolete and methods which have been superseded. If we would develop the initiative of a man properly, we must allow him to encounter unexpected obstacles which compel him to solve new problems. He soon discovers that it is wise to learn all that is known about a subject before he undertakes to make improvements. When he has learned to do the work as well as is already known to be possible, every encouragement should be given him to devise new and better methods. Initiative should be recognized to the greatest possible extent, and every opportunity should be taken to illustrate the value of knowledge in connection with it.—H. L. Gantt, in the Engineering Magazine for May.
