Academ Dormitory Is Thrown Open to Public

The interest displayed by the several hundred alumni and friends of the Harrisburg Academy who attended the housewarming and informal reception for inspection of the Seller dormitory and the Lyman D. Gilbert yesterday afternoon, was amply rewarded by the marked improvement noted in the swift development of the Academy to a institution that is just beginning to show the latent possibilities that exist for its becoming one of the dominating educational factors in the State.

Previous to the reception, which was held from 4 to 8 in the afternoon, Spencer C. Gilbert and former Deputy Attorney General Frederic W. Flaits, of Scarton, addressed the students.

Mr. Flaits was a close personal friend of Lyman D. Gilbert, who died one year ago yesterday, and he paid tribute in his remarks to the splendid traits of the man, urging that the boys follow out his example in their own lives.

The Lyman D. Gilbert library is located in the northern wing of the main Academy building, is beautifully finished and a model library for boys. The selection of books was made with a view to variety and one or two of the best works of practically all the standard writers have found places on its shelves.

Illustrated magazines of this and other countries will be supplied periodically and the best newspapers and literary publications of the country will be provided. Mrs. Gilbert has left nothing undone in her efforts to give the students the best that is to be had.
