COAL INDUSTRY HAS BIG REVIVAL

Chief Roderick Makes Some Interesting Statements Regarding the Trade

"Higher prices for coal are expected during the year 1916. They are at least hoped for most ardently by most of the bituminous operators who feel that an advance of from five to twenty-five cents a ton its absolutely necessary to keep them from loss. The two principal arguments for a higher price are, that all other articles consumed or used in any way by the public have advanced in price, and the further reason that the profits on bituminous coal have hitherto been entirely too small. The existence of some of the operators, when the selling price is so very little greater than the cost of production is very precarious, and it is the general opinion that a higher price must be received for the production of some of the less firmly entrenched and less favorably situated operators will be compelled to relinquish the business. Another element that enters into this question, is the steady advance in the cost of production, due to the deeper mines, the longer hauls and the higher cost of labor, all elements that affect materially the total cost of production and enforcement of the Compensation Act of 1915 will no doubt place an additional burden on the coal operators. The reporting of accidents to the State authorities with the utmost dispatch after their occurrence will in some instances be somewhat difficult and expensive, and other improvements should be assessed against property not contiguous.

For The Property Owners

"Obviously," continued Mr. Lathrop, "these residents desire a material benefit to their properties, yet, under the law, they will bear none of the expense. The abutting property owners will bear all or most of the cost, Should not these residents pay a special assessment for this special benefit?"

Director Lathrop touched interestingly on the wide street question. "The city," said he, "is a transportation device and the priciples of transportation device and the priciples of transportation should govern the lay-out. It is a popular fallacy that all streets should be wide. We might as well say that all shoes should be large. The shoe should fit the foot, the streets should fit the use. In the quiet residential districts the street should be set far back thus giving light and air and lawns for the children. At the same time this would involve less expenditure for construction and maintenance of pavements.

"But," added Mr. Lathrop impressively. "arterial highways should be capacious, removing all obstacles in order to permit the flow of traffic economically."

THE PARASITE

that she had a power over him, and she meant to use it to the fullest possible extent.

That night, indeed, after she had once gone to her own room and assured herself that she could lock herself in, she deliberately ventured into the lion's den, metaphorically speaking. She went down to the office, which Reynolds also used as a library. He was sitting there, alone—the servants had all rettred. At the sight of her he started up, plainly pleased, but Mona drew back in confusion.

"He to creat myself to sleep."

"Help yourself, my dear," he said. "I like to read myself to sleep."

"Help yourself, my dear," he said. "You—"he chuckled, meaningly, and leered at her—"you're welcome to more than a book from me!"

She went to the shelves, and, after she had selected a novel, made for the door.

"Sit down," he said. "Sit down and

"Oh, no," she said. "I mustn't stay. Remember I'm nothy your housekeeper, Mr. Reynolds."

He cackled at that, and she started as she saw him go to his safe and open it. But, though she tried, she couldn't make out the combination—he was chrewd enough to prevent that. When he turned back he held out a necklace to her, a sting of sparkling brilliants. "Look at the pretties!" he said. Mona took the necklace and looked at it admiringly. "It's beautiful," she said. "I envy you that, I believe!"

"Ha-ha!" he chuckled. "Try it on, my dear! Who knows? If you and I get along you might wear it for you own!"

Mona pretended not to understand,

Mone pretended not to understand, and returned it to him.

"Now I must go to bed," she said.

"Good night, Mr. Reynolds!"

"So soon," he said, wistfully. "Tve got more jewels to show you."

"More" she said, "I should think you'd be afraid of theves!"

"I'm guarded against them," he said, shrewdly. "Look.—'I'll show you!"

And in the next few moments, thanks to his vanity, Mona was able to make a mental chart of the whole burglar alarm system that protected the place. She had hoped for this, rather than expected it. And then she went to her room. But in a few minutes there came a tapping at her door. "It's me!" said her employer's cracked voice. "Is everything all right?"

"Quite, thanke." said Mona. with an affectation of sleepiness in her voice. He turned away at that and went to his own room, disappointment plainly written on his face.

Mona slept little. But she was up, bright and fresh, in the morning. She was not afraid of Reynolds by day. As she suspected, he had plenty to the subject of the subject of the had plenty to the subject of the subject of doubtless had its basis in an increasing conviction that the crisis with Germany had passed. Buying was of a free and confident character, although representative stocks were again subordinated to the demand for spectalties. Mercantile Marines and United Fruit, as well as the oils, motors and coppers were most conspicuous in the dealings, together with such war shares as Crucible and Lackawanna Steels, American Can, American Locomotive and Westingshouse. Gains in these various issues ranged from 2 to 5 points. Mexicans featured the final hour. Petroleum making an extreme gain of over six points. The closing was strong. Bonds were firm.
