SECOND EXPEDITION MAY CROSS BORDER

burned, pillaged and murdered. They then split into two bands of a hundred each, one of these bands raiding the little town of Deemers, preceding to Boquillas, and then across the river into Mexico to Boquillas del Carmen, where they looted the Boquillas mine, owned by the International Mining Company, an American concern. The other band, however, in the night which will go down in American history as one of the bravest ever put up by American soldiers, retried back to Mexico by the ford at San Vicente, just east of Terlingua.

A Wonderful Fight

Nine troops of the Fourteenth United States Cavalry were all the soldiers that were in all of this wild country. They were stationed at Glen Springs and commanded by a sergeant named Smith. Two hundred mounted Mexicans came on suddenly at 7.30 o'clock Friday night. From the windows of the little shack in which they were quartered they fought for all they were worth. At 1 o'clock Saturday morning the fire of them was dead and two were wounded. Without a thought of surrender in the face of the overwhelming force confronting them, Smith carried the dead and wounded out of the rear door, piled them into a motor truck and started them north over the wagon road to Marathon, eighty-five miles away.

That, in brief, is the story of Glenn Springs, and, it is reported, ready for another scrap if the bandits come back.

Spring, a place that will live in American memories with Santa Ysabel and Columbus.

There wasn't a soul to help the handful of troopers. At Deemers and Boquillas the Americans fled before the raiders, and the nearest troop were men of the Fourteenth Cavalry, under Captain Casper W. Cole, at Alpine, nearly a hundred miles away.

Two troops of the Fourteenth Cavalry, under Colonel Frederick W. Sibley, have been started from Fort Clark, San Antonio Junction, for the scene of this latest outrage. Two troops of the Eighth Cavalry, under Major George T. Langhorne, formerly military attaché at Berlin, left here this afternoon for Marathon. It will be late this afternoon at the earliest before any of these reinforcements can get to Marathon. After that they have an eighty-five-mile ride by horse to the southern extremity of the Big Bend country. Yet it is not believed that the American soldiers can get through Glenn Springs, Deemer or Boquillas before Wednesday at noon, for they must take their horses with them, and the horses cannot be transported by motor trucks, of which there are plenty in this vicinity.

General Hugh L. Scott, chief of the staff of the United States Army, and General Frederick Funston were appalled at the news when it reached here. It came just as they were getting ready to go to the immigration station on the international bridge for a final conference with Alvaro Obregon, Mexican minister of war, concerning the ratifying of the tentative agreement reached at the long parley held last Tuesday. When they did meet General Obregon found them as much agitated over the news as themselves. The meeting was a short and sharp one.

here that there are to be extensive operations in the Big Bend country and the men responsible for the latest outrages are to be rounded up if it is a possible thing.

These operations will be in a region where there is no telephone and telegraph communication, and General Funston made it clear that he proposes to draw a veil over all proceedings until the American troops come out again. It is not believed that Colonel Sibley will be overcautious of the international boundary line when he gets after the bandits, so there may be a second invasion of Mexico by American soldiers before many days. This is a subject, however, of which the military is, of course, silent.

Naturally, the name of Villa is associated with the latest raids. It is even asserted in some quarters that the bandit was at the head of the raiders, but from no reliable source comes information, official or unofficial, to indicate that the author of the Santa Ysabel and the Columbus massacres personally took part in the murders and pillage of Friday night and Saturday morning.

A grave question is how this fresh evidence of the absolute inability of the troops of the de facto government to handle Mexico's internal situation is to affect the negotiations which were believed to be approaching successful consummation. On both sides of the river military and civil officials are plainly up in the air over what is to come next.

The Dead and Wounded
The names of the dead soldiers have not been sent here yet. The boy who was killed was named Wood. He was the son of Captain Wood, of the firm of Ellis & Wood, which operates a wax factory just east of Glen Springs. Mr. Deemer, who was first taken captive and then killed by the bandits, was formerly a well-known contractor of Tucson, Ariz. He conducted a large store at the place named after him. He was famous in the bad lands in which he lived as being the only man who never carried a weapon of any kind.
