discontinue it in case of hemorrhage or other incapacity. The majority of physicians advocate chicken-raising as a practical occupation for the average tubercular patient requiring little original investment and a minimum of physical exertion. The work of mixing the daily food supply, setting the hens, gathering the eggs and disposing of the young chickens is not apt to make any great demands on the vitality. The patient should live in a shack or tent even more accessible to the open air than is the shelter of his chickens, and eat many fresh eggs.

Many poultry establishments, originally undertaken by tuberculars as a means of bare existence, have become prosperous business ventures. In Tucson the tubercular poultry-raisers have formed an association which holds its meeting in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce, subscribes for numerous poultry journals and gives advice to beginners. It has a monopoly on the fresh egg and poultry industry of Tucson.

Flower-raising, too, is an attractive and remunerative employment for the invalid whose cure is the open air. In Southern California the amateur flower garden has become an institution among tubercular patients, who sell flower decorations to the popular restaurants. In fact, the amateur garden is springing into existence in all parts of the country, so that a new profession has been created—that of the garden specialist. There is a tremendous popular interest in gardening. The women's clubs have taken it up and are holding regular classes in which they employ the specialist to lecture and certain towns have established community classes for children when gardening is not included in the public school curriculum.

A Chicago school teacher, displaying symptoms of tuberculosis, was advised by her physician to adopt some outdoor employment. The teacher had heard of the special training in gardening work carried on upon the large estates of England, and she decided to spend a summer there, attending one of the castle schools. Her profession learned, she returned to this country and set up an establishment in a small country place near Chicago. From here she travels to each suburb of the city, instructing classes in amateur gardening and discussing horticultural possibilities of that particular community.

Farming of any kind is an ideal occupation for the tubercular, the majority of the working routine being confined to the open, and, if handled properly, is more remunerative than most other outdoor professions.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 12.—Mrs. Eva Geigerman, Cincinnati, is suing the Chicago, Duluth and Georgian Bay Transit company in the Federal Court for $20,000 damages. She and her son, Moses, were taking a trip on one of the company's boats in 1914. The boat stopped at Ft. William, Ontario, giving the passengers brief shore leave. It departed from another dock, making it necessary for Mrs. Geigerman and Moses to walk about half a mile to reach it. Mrs. Geigerman alleges the walk brought on a serious illness for which damages are asked.

Truth and Trade

By Bishop Warren A. Candler
Chancellor of Emory University, Atlanta

When a seller and a buyer have made a trade, based on truth, both have obtained a benefit, and the community to which they belong has been benefited insofar as their interests affect the welfare of the community. Each has parted with that which the other needed, and in turn has obtained from his fellow-man what he himself needed. Honest exchanges, therefore, enhance values.

But trades based on untruth damage all concerned. They approach dangerously near to theft.

By advertising, buyers and sellers are brought together, and truthful advertising promotes the welfare of the commercial world; it is, in fact, a part of the wealth-producing forces of the world. But untruthful advertising is a fraud and the fosterer of fraud. It partakes of the nature of the crime of getting money, or goods, under false pretenses. The medium of advertising, whatever its nature, which lends its columns to such advertising, accepts a bribe to become accessory to the same crime.

It is a far-reaching reform proposed by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in the motto "Truth". Such a sentiment must act like a health-laden current on the trade winds. Its influence will extend far beyond the limits of advertising, and stimulate honesty in all the processes and transactions of commerce.

The patron saints of the commercial world ought not to be Ananias and Sapphira. Lying spirits cannot guide safely the merchantmen of the world. The argosies of trade must sail by the pole-star of truth. Otherwise they will be wrecked.
