King Pixy

By LOIS KAMERLIN BOOKER

Deep, deep in the forest where elf creatures dwell I wandered one evening when strange things befell. A little brown pixy sprang out of the ground. He called when he saw me, "Come, dance me around." His warm earth brown fingers clasped mine, and mind you, From tip toe to toe tip so little I grew That the buttercups whispered, "We're taller than you."

He shrilled through a grass blade a call clear and sweet. Sprites flew from the violets that grew near our feet. In a circle around us their airy forms swept, And they bent not a flower, so lightly they stept, As they asked in low whispers the wish of their king. "Dance to-night with my friend," he replied, "while you sing Of the gold fish that swallowed the fairy queen's ring."

Over carpets of moss, along streams singing clear We whirled to the music of winds piping near. By a brooklet we knelt and I looked in to see What kind of a fairy or elf I might be.

I was only a pixy, so funny and stout, Like the queer little king. Loud my laughter rang out Till the real little pixy stamped the ground with a shout,

Red flames darted up from the points of his crown.
The clear stream grew dark at his terrible frown.
At his muttering tones the low waters rose high.
On their crest ugly faces and forms floated by.
Angry eyes glared at me through the white, splashing spray.
Flashing drops fell upon me, ill in my dismay
I plead with King Pixy to wave them away.

At the touch of his wand the flerce waters grew still. I felt myself change to a child with a thrill. The sprites turned to amethyst mist with a sigh. "Naughty earth, child," they chided, "our king to deny," Humbled, ashamed, to the king I bent low, "King Pixy," I cried out, "I want you to know How sorry I am that I angered you so."

I gazed at King Pixy; he smiled up at me.
From his crown, from his form I was startled to see
Golden flames streaming far, lighting up the dark wood;
Playing bright on the stream, on the moss where he stood.
From his heart through his coat shone a gold ray of light,
That lit up a path covered over by night,
And opened strange wild flowers with petals of white.

Around me in wonder I saw a ring drawn Wide and golden, and flushed with the colors "Tis the beautiful fairies' ring 'round you. "Tis the beautiful fairles' ring 'round you, my dea king Pixy said softly. "Run home without fear. But forget not this night in the forest with me. Remember there's beauty in all that you see; Never laugh at the mask that may hide it from thee."

Premier Asquith intended also to meet several civilian deputations so as to learn at first hand their ideas concerning the reconstruction of the destroyed portions of Dublin and perhaps to formulate a plan for compensation. There is relief apparent among the population at the promised cessation of executions which were beginning to cause considerable agitation.
