BRITISH STOP GERMAN ATTEMPT TO CROSS YSER

Prohibitionists in City Indicate Thrust at Lines in Flanders North of Ypres Is Beaten Back

Six Killed at Dunkirk; Fighting in Champagne

With comparative quiet prevailing

With comparative quiet prevailing at Verdun, the Germans last night made a thrust at the British lines in Flanders, attempting to cross the Yser canal north of Ypres. The French war office, which reports the attempt, declares that it failed.

The sector picked for the attack is one that would naturally be chosen by the Germans for an effort to break the British front and drive toward Calais. Some of the fiercest fighting of the war has taken place along the Yser during previous German attempts to advance toward the English channel.

Activity has also been displayed by the Germans in other sectors of the western front, notably in a gas attack in the Champagne region, which is also declared to have been fruitless.

There have been numerous raids by German aircraft. Three seaplanes raided the British east coast, but according to the British announcement they caused but a few casualties and lost one of their machines, which was brought down off the Belgian coast. An aeroplane attack on Dunkirk and Bergues resulted in the killing of six persons and the wounding of thirty-eight others.

According to to-day's Turkish official report, there has been little fighting of importance between the Turkish and Russlan armies fronting each other in the Caucasus and Mesopotamian campaigns.

A shipping board of five members, empowered to prevent rate discrimination and unfair practices by all ships plying American waters, fix maximum rates, would be created.
