ON RECENT LAWS

States Criticism of the Act of 1915 Relative to Mine Foremen and Bosses

James E. Roderick, State Chief of Mines, does not view with very great favor the enactment of the act of 1915 exempting mine foremen and fire bosses from examination in a report submitted to the Governor.

The chief makes these comments: "What would seem like a step back-ward in mining legislation, was the amendment made by the Legislature of 1915 to the laws relating to the examination of mine foremen and fire bosses in both the anthracite and bituminous regions, by which these officials were exempted from examination.

"Ever since the passage of the act of 1885 the operators have been obliged to confine their selection of mine foremen and fire bosses to the men who held certificates of qualification from the Department of Mines, received after examination by the State boards, but they may now employ whom they please, with the restriction, however, that the men employed must possess equal qualifications with the men who hold certificates.
