The Social Pirates

Story No. 6 The Master Swindlers Plot by George Bronson Howard. Novelization by Hugh C. Weir. Copyright Kalem Company.

(Continued from Yesterday.) So the next day Mona gladly accepted Harry's offer to help with the finishing touches her copy required. She thanked him when it was done, and went away. But she lingered and saw him come out, and then she returned and took up the watch from a nook she had discovered in her wanderings in the museum.

Harry, however, saw him come into Meinotte's and she was able to hear him tell the dealer that he was going to "turn the trick" about noon, when there would be few visitors. When he went out with the copy of the Monna Vanna that she had found in the storeroom hidden under his coat, she telephoned to Meinotte, who had agreed to be in a certain pay station near the museum.

She saw him take the spurious Monna Vanna under his coat; saw him, too, cover the back of the copy with paste. Then, very swiftly and dextrously, he cut the real painting from its frame and substituting the copy, smoothed it down. And after he had hidden the Monna Vanna, he calmly sat down and resumed his copying. An attendant passed soon afterward, but saw nothing wrong, and Mona wanted to applaud Harry's coolness and nerve. He gave absolutely no sign, as the man passed him, of being nervous.

He passed out of Mona's ken then, of course, but passed into Mary's as soon as he reached Meinotte's. Neither man was at all suspicious of Mary. She had rendered herself thoroughly unobtrusive ever since she had come to work, and they took her pretty much for granted. That suited her very well because it increased her opportunities for observation.

She managed to see Harry take the stolen picture and show it to Meinotte. And then she saw something that surprised her, and upset all her calculations. They took the real art treasure, the picture Harry had stolen, and put it carefully into the frame from which the copy that Harry had substituted for it had been taken.

That was the one thing Harry had not expected them to do. She had been certain somehow, that still another copy, perhaps the one Harry had been making, was going into that frame, and her whole plan had been based upon that certainty. She knew that Meinotte had been in communication with a famous collector, a rival of Crogan, the leader of the Monna Vanna to the Columbian Museum, named Wellington Watson. And she had been sure, too, that she had seen through the plan they had made to hoodwink Watson.

Now she was utterly baffled, and she realized that she would, at the eleventh hour, have to make an entirely new plan, unless she wanted all the work she and Mona had already done to go for nothing.

Her only grain of comfort was that she heard Meinotte, speaking over the telephone, make an appointment with Watson, for the following afternoon. They were to meet at the museum. Mary was afraid to jump at conclusion again, but she did feel that there was a chance now to save the day.

"We're like people working in the dark," she told Mona that night, when the two compared notes. "So far there's been altogether too much guess work to suit me, and now now I'd like to have some facts to work with."

"We've got to have them!" said Mona. "And the only essential thing is to overhear the conversation tomorrow when Meinotte meets Watson at the museum."

They nodded their agreement. "You'll have to be the one to get these facts," she said. "And I don't see how you'd expect to do it! They're sure to be suspicious if there's anyone within earshot."

"Leave that to me," said Mona, confidently. "I'll be or two discoveries about that museum since I've been working there with Harry. Did you ever hear of the whispering gallery?"

march to Reservoir Park for lunch hour. During the past eighteen years the Harrisburg C. E. Union has increased from 30 to 67 societies. One hundred and ninety-four new societies have been organized in the State since July 1, 1914. During the past year three county and twelve local unions have been added and new societies are being organized at the rate of three each week. Many counties including Luzerne, Allegheny, Philadelphia, Adams and others are planning to run big C. E. special trains. A big excursion will run to Gettysburg on July 15 at the rate of $1.00 for the round trip from Harrisburg. The reception of delegates will be well taken care of and the chairman, W. M. Malley, promises to arrange to receive all delegates as they arrive at the railroad stations, Philadelphia and Reading, and the Pennsylvania railroads, and direct them to the place of registration. The committee is forming plans and will be assisted by the Boy Scouts under command of Captain Garfield McAllister, and by a number of young lady endeavorers. Two hundred scheduled trains arrive and depart in Harrisburg daily. Evangelistic services will be held in shops, business places, jail, hospitals, etc., under the direction of O. K. Kines, chairman of the evangelistic committee. The city has been divided into three districts and will be provided with live-wire speakers and good singing. The convention hall, booths, churches and business places will be decorated with C. E. colors, several denominational and national color decorations. A. J. Lightner, chairman, and a hustling committee will have charge of the work. Delegates may get advanced registration by sending registration fee, 50 cents, by post office money order, John F. Kob, 1501 Swatara street, who is chairman of entertainment committee. Allegheny and Philadelphia county unions have already made arrangements to register their delegates. Miss Ida M. Sowers, chairlady, will tag the delegates when they register with pretty souvenir badges. The following persons will appear on the program at the Park Street Evangelical C. E. Society to-morrow: Miss Gertrude Geise will give an address on missionary work in China, and Miss Helen Roberts, of the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, will sing a solo, entitled "Open the Gates of the Temple." The program will be interesting in every particular. The topic for to-morrow in the Christian Endeavor societies of the different churches is "How Missions Are Blessing the World." The following are the leaders who will conduct the services in the various C. E. societies to-morrow: Second Reformed--Missionary committee, Sixth Street U. B. Church--Mrs. Wade Beyer, speaker; Francis Gill, leader, U. B. Church, Enola--Mrs. Minnie Burtner. Christ Lutheran--Gertrude Hefflinger, Augsburg, Miss Mary Kreiner; St. John's Evangelical Lutheran, Steelton, Mrs. C. F. Brunhouse; St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran, West Fairview, Laura Langletz. Harris Street United Evangelical, missionary committee. Park Street United Evangelical, Mrs. A. E. Hansen and Miss Esther Ebersole. Fourth Street Church of God--Cora Dugan and Robert Houseal. Presbyterian--Westminster, Miss Belle Walter; Immanuel, Margaret Jacobs; Olivet, missionary committee; Market Square, Miss Cora Shertzer.
