THE Importance of Selling Customers What They Ask For

A STORE'S service is judged by the intelligence displayed in supplying the wants of its patrons.

SERVING customers satisfactorily means supplying them with products they ask for.

THIS paper has a discriminating class of readers, and the greatest asset any retailer can have is to secure and hold their patronage.

OUR readers know what they want, so when they ask for any product by manufacturer's or trade-mark name, give them the identical article asked for. Any attempt to palm off a "Just as Good" will likely result in the loss of a sale and a valued customer.

MORE and more dealers are daily experiencing the advantages of selling customers what they ask for. The advantages are "quicker sales" and "better-pleased customers," and it is a well-established fact that pleased customers will become permanent customers.

THE growth of any business depends upon the alertness thoroughness and intelligence displayed in catering to customers' wants.

THE readers of this paper have money to spend, and you can get your share of it if you'll always give them what they ask for.
