PRINCIPALS IN THE JUNIOR AID PLAY

The above cut is that of Miss Theodora Sanrage Kaufman, who will take the part of the prince in "The Princess Who Couldn't Dance." Miss Kaufman has not only the honor of assuming the principal role but the distinction of having written the play. The play is an old-time fairy story with a king and queen and prince and the indispensable old witch. The play has been adopted by Miss Kaufman for the Junior Aid.

Miss Kaufman possesses all around ability not only as a writer but as an artist. This is the first "real literary" work of the little authoress although she has written several poems for children's magazines and had several stories published in "The Cricket," the Setler School paper, the school where she is a student.

The play is supervised by Allen Sengree the little dramatist's uncle who has had no part whatever in dramatizing and planning the play. The costumes, scenery and every detail has been under the direction and arranged by Miss Kaufman.

And now everything is in readiness, the Junior Aid will present their play, at the Board of Trade, Thursday evening.

The other cut shows that of Miss Nelle Powell Payne who will star in the title role of the princess. Miss Payne assumes her part unusually well and with her wonderful flowing, golden hair and graceful manner is an ideal princess, whom any prince with an eye for beauty would be bound to captivate to her sweet charms.

The Sara Lemer orchestra will play for an hour after the play for dancing.
