

NO FORLORN HOPE FOR ROOSEVELT

Wisdom of Hughes' Nomination Impresses All; Only Ultra-Radicals Displeased

(Special Editorial Correspondence) Chicago, June 12.—With the clearing of the political skies and a closer analysis of the situation there is a better understanding of the results of the great Republican round-up of the last ten days. The prompt and unmistakable challenge of Justice Hughes to the Wilson administration came as a clarion call after the strenuous efforts of the stalwarts and progressives to get together and the response has been immediate.

Radicals For T. R. As indicated in previous dispatches the radical section of the Progressive party came to Chicago determined to accept nobody but Roosevelt and this element gave such men as Perkins and Flinn and Garfield no end of trouble through their insistence upon immediate action upon the candidate and the platform.

It must not be forgotten that many of the Progressive were former Democrats, representing Southern States and these would never consent to affiliation with the Republican party. This it was that a considerable group steadily opposed any alliance with another party.

Roosevelt For Hughes It is not believed in any well-informed quarter, however, that the Colonel will consent to lead a forlorn hope; nor is there any thought among those who are in close political relationship to him that he will aid in the re-election of Wilson by a division of the anti-Wilson vote.

There is some resentment among his radical followers as a result of Roosevelt's qualified declination of the Progressive nomination, but men in position to discuss with more or less authority third-party affairs, speaking privately do not hesitate to say that the grave national problems now waiting for solution will be met by Democratic groups into a compact and aggressive force that will move forward to an overwhelming victory.

ROTARY CLUB HEARS SPEECHES AND ENJOYS LUNCHEON STUNTS

Two Automobile Runs and Trip to Lancaster Are Announced; Meeting Next Monday Evening

William M. Robison was chairman of today's Rotary Club luncheon at the Columbus Hotel. It was a lively affair and the attendance was the largest in the history of the club. Addresses were made by Arthur D. Bacon, former president, on business conditions of the present and immediate future, and by Dr. F. E. Downes, city superintendent of schools, on the folly of applying the most advanced discoveries of science to the destructive purposes of war instead of the constructive tasks of peace.

President Howard C. Fry announced that the club will go to Lancaster to attend the outing of the Lancaster club next Tuesday, meeting in front of the Telegraph building at 2 o'clock. The regular meeting of the club will be held Monday evening at the headquarters of the Worden Paint and Roof Company. The first Friday in August the Rotarians will have an automobile run to Hagerstown. On the last Friday in the month the members and their wives will have an automobile run to Buena Vista.

Chairman Robison was presented with the original of the accompanying cartoon, with the compliments of the Telegraph.

INDICT READING COMPANY

The Philadelphia and Reading Railway Company was indicted for the third time by the Federal grand jury in Philadelphia on Saturday, charged with violating the interstate commerce and Elkins act in failing to file tariffs of its rates and charges for coal transported over its haul lines from Port Richmond to points in New England. It is also charged that the defendant violated the Elkins act in failing to collect demurrage from shippers on coal held by the company over the time allotted by law.

POLICE PLAN OUTING

Officers of the city police force are planning to hold a big outing and athletic meet next month at Paxtonia. A committee has been appointed by the officers to complete arrangements and plan a program for the day. Luncheon and contests will be included in the sport. Arrangements are being made by Officers Hess, Demma, Wiseman, Balthaser, Motorcycle Officer Fetrow, and Detective Schelhas.

LEADERS BOOST THE BIG TICKET

Ex-President Taft, Penrose, Brumbaugh and Others Praise the Nominees

Nominations of Hughes and Fairbanks have been given enthusiastic approval by the leaders of the Republicans of Pennsylvania to an extent that has attracted attention of men who ordinarily do not follow politics. Even men inclined to be independent have been struck by the manner in which leaders have praised the work of the convention.

Ex-President William H. Taft, who was in Philadelphia on Saturday, gave the ticket unstinted praise and predicted that it would win. Dr. Taft was immensely interested in the news of the balloting and when the news came that Hughes had won he gathered newspapermen about him and said: "Justice Hughes is the highest type of man for the office. He is essentially an American. He is a statesman and a scholar. He bridges the unfortunate breach of 1912 in that he was on the bench at that time and played no part in the happenings."

"He is one of the best campaigners—a man who always gets votes by his ease and facility of expression. He is a man who makes his own way."

"There is no reason why the people cannot support Hughes, for having been nominated on the platform that he has been and accepting the nomination, he becomes the embodiment of the causes of the people. There is no question of his ability. He has been Governor of a great State and has been a powerful influence on the bench."

"His great strength as a candidate is in pleading the cause of his party. In 1909 he made a speech which, in my opinion, was the greatest in the history of American politics. He showed Mr. Bryan's weakness as a candidate. He dealt vigorously yet gently with Bryan. And I heard then that Bryan resented that speech as the greatest obstacle he had to meet."

"I am hopeful that the Progressives will see the light and accept Hughes as the exponent of a united Republicanism in favor of real and constructive preparedness in contrast to a measure, which is regarded as a party issue and passed without the means provided to carry out the provisions. I am much rejoiced at the prospects of Republican victory under such a standard bearer."

"As a man Fairbanks is experienced in practical government. For many years he was a member of the Senate Committee of the Senate and he was one of president McKinley's supporters and advisers. Besides that, he was four years the Vice-President. He is an admirable speaker and a campaigner of the widest experience and effectiveness."

Mr. Wanamaker's Talk

In commenting upon the action of the convention Mr. Wanamaker said: "We came out of the Red Sea in confusion upon a straight road. We came into the sunlight when, with great unanimity, the convention settled on Charles E. Hughes, as was expected, after the expression of the convention in its first two ballots."

"Before the balloting was half over it was evident that the tide had set in one direction. The reading of the report of the Conference Committee giving in extenso the facts of the convention, in which every possible effort had evidently been made, resulting in the Progressive Party laying on the table the Republican nomination, cleared the skies. And the Republican convention went straight forward, recording its vote for Charles E. Hughes, the man of silence, who, like another man of silence, General Sessens S. Grant, is a victory by his deeds rather than by his words."

"Pennsylvania united in the request that I should present the name of Charles Warren Fairbanks, as Vice President. It was an agreeable privilege to do so. He had already been nominated for the Presidency by several States and he is certainly big enough to be Vice-President. His long experience in public life and his well-known integrity and business qualifications, justified from personal acquaintance with him, my belief that his name added to the ticket would be a victory of great importance to the business community throughout the United States, but inside and outside the Republican Party would win the most widespread recognition for the high qualities of the candidate."

Penrose's Views

Senator Penrose will remain for a couple of days to attend the meetings of the Republican National Committee. He made this formal statement: "The ticket nominated today will be elected by a decisive vote and it will carry Pennsylvania by an overwhelming Republican majority. The National Convention was remarkable in many respects. Perhaps the dominating feature of all this was the unpledged character of the delegates. They came to Chicago in most cases without instructions and with a single purpose of doing what would be best for the Republican Party and the country."

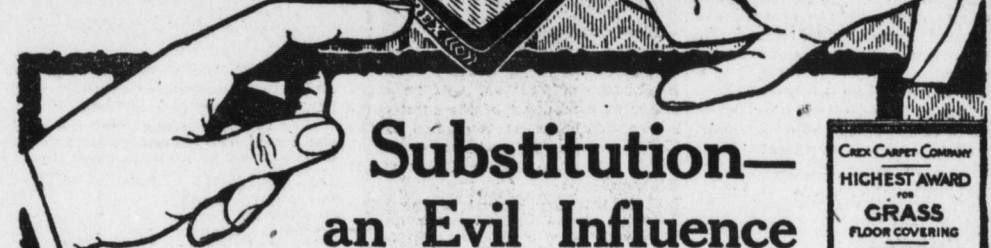

"I have seldom, if ever, witnessed a political gathering where so much good feeling prevailed during the discussion and controversy regarding candidates. In fact, there was an absence of ill-feeling or of disappointment on the part of those who were interested in some particular candidacy."

"All of the candidates expressed their willingness to join in simplifying the situation and at no time did difficulties present themselves in bringing out an early adjournment. The convention was composed of a very high order of men and the outcome of our deliberations is very gratifying. Under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the party brought about by the unfortunate division of 1912, the nomination of Justice Hughes was pre-eminently a logical outcome. Everybody wants harmony and a healing of dissensions of the past."

"The nomination has come to Justice Hughes unsolicited and perhaps undesired. It is pre-eminently a call to which he has deemed it expedient to respond. As part of the political situation, it frequently has been declared that in this instance the office should seek the man and that what has happened. It cannot be said that the nomination is in any sense the result of combination of political manipulation. It is an expression of the supreme will of the people expressed by their representative delegates."

"The nomination of Charles W. Fairbanks will add strength to the ticket, particularly in Indiana where a United States Senator will be elected. It is, of course, of the highest importance that the Republicans should have a majority in the Senate. In addition to the political aspect of Mr. Fairbanks' nomination, it is coming to be realized that the office of Vice-President is of great importance and the Vice-President may be called upon to vote in case of a tie more often perhaps than during any previous periods in the country's history. In this respect his unquestioned Republicanism and patriotism will inspire confidence. He has shown through his previous incumbency of the office that he is an industrious and faithful presiding officer and an able parliamentary. Of course, the House usually goes with the party that is successful. The next House will be Republican, because the ticket nominated today will be elected by a decisive majority. The most important thing in addition to the election of a National ticket will be to obtain a majority in the Senate."

The Governor

Governor Brumbaugh joined in the spirit of the delegation. "This is a splendid ticket," said the Governor, "and it ought to commend itself both to Republicans and Progressives and ought to mark the end of the factionalism in the party."

"As I view it, Roosevelt is bound to support Justice Hughes as much as are the rest of us. Like the rest of us, he has had his choice and by his announcement to the convention and his participation in its deliberations he is bound by the rule of the majority to abide by the decision of the majority."

"Mr. Hughes, I think, will be a very strong candidate and will grow increasingly strong as the people begin to understand the splendid things which he has done and for which he stands. He will have the courage to defend the dignity of this country and the lives of its citizens and their property a matter of great moment in this crisis."

"My judgment is that Justice Hughes will be elected by a handsome majority. Fairbanks has been Vice-President before and has demonstrated his ability and capacity. The party makes no experiment in him. He is absolutely a safe and capable man, and acceptable to all the interests in the party, and his selection will probably carry with it the election of two Republican United States Senators from Indiana, which will be a victory of great importance to our Congressional legislative program."

Senator James P. McNichol, of Philadelphia, who voted for Roosevelt in the early balloting, said: "I regard the work of the convention as superb. It will insure the active support of the ticket by the great business interests of the country and in Pennsylvania it will be an inspiration for party harmony and party activity from the very outset of the campaign. Philadelphia with such a ticket should give a record-breaking majority next Fall. We should bear no more of factional differences in our State and should all work together for a great Republican victory."

Congressman William S. Vare said: "The nomination of Justice Hughes is effective in reuniting the Republican party. It is doubtful whether there was ever a convention held by any party that was less boding than this one. The leaders had their meetings, but the delegates did their own balloting. There was no so-called leader who would promise to deliver the votes of a single delegation. Justice Hughes is a strong American. His public record is ample assurance for the future. He will have the confidence of the Republican voters, feel sure that Colonel Roosevelt, with his loyalty to Americanism, and his characteristic singleness of purpose, will be the ablest supporter that Hughes and Fairbanks will have."

"It is a ticket that will inspire confidence in the business and financial world and in the ranks of the great body of the people," said Alba B. Johnson, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works of Philadelphia, and one of the delegates-at-large. "Industrial preparedness," he added, "will certainly be the issue of the near future. The Republican party could not have made a better selection than Justice Hughes."

One of the first delegates of the Pennsylvania delegation to turn in for Justice Hughes was former Lieutenant Governor Louis A. Watres, of Scranton. "Justice Hughes has many ties with Pennsylvania," said Colonel Watres. "His father was pastor of the Jackson Street Baptist Church in Scranton, Pa., and the Justice has many friends and some relatives in the Lackawanna Valley. The action of the convention in selecting him after the most admirably poised and truly deliberative sessions I have ever known is a vindication of Republicanism at its best. I predict for the nominees of this convention an overwhelming victory at the polls, a victory in which Pennsylvania will gloriously lead."

Dr. Hawes Makes Strong Plea For Raising Funds

That God is a believer in reciprocity was the theme of the Rev. Dr. George E. Hawes' sermon in Market Square Presbyterian Church yesterday morning, when he made an earnest plea for more general support of the plan to raise $40,000 for the necessary improvements at Belling Springs which will be held at Belling Springs on Wednesday, June 21. THOUSANDS AT BRICKER BAKERY

Big Building at Lemoyne Inspected by Public; Grocers and Clerks Tomorrow

The weatherman was kind enough to delay the deluge until after opening reception at the big bakery at Lemoyne, Saturday evening. Consequently thousands of people came to see the West Shore Bakery plant. All the spotless white of the walls and ceilings, the brilliant lighting effect, the palm and potted plants, and the orchestras playing on two floors, the effect was pleasing and the crowd was in a happy mood. The street outside was filled with motor cars, while through the doors of the big bakery plant the crowd surged in and out most of the afternoon and until late in the evening. Refreshments were served to all who came and all the bread that was baked during the day was distributed during the evening hours. Many beautiful flowers were sent by friends, and among them was a large basket of peonies about eight feet high, from the employees of the bakery, to Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Bricker.

To-morrow evening all the grocers and their clerks will inspect the big bakery. This will include the stores in Harrisburg and from all surrounding towns to which Bricker's bread is shipped.
