HARRISBURGERS TALK ON FORESTS

Conklin, Hargest and McNaughton Discuss Problems at Reading

The midsummer convention of the Pennsylvania Forestry Association opened yesterday morning in the auditorium of the Berkshire Hotel, Reading, with representatives present from practically every organization in Pennsylvania in any way connected with forestry or conservation.

forestry lines. He laid special stress on the need for prevention rather than extinction of forest fires, and on the necessity for the State purchasing more forest land. N. R. McNaughton, representing the Department of Forestry and the Pennsylvania Foresters' Association, emphasized the absolute necessity of larger appropriations if the work of the department is to be carried on efficiently. He showed that the State needs to treble its present holdings of forest lands; that a larger working force is needed; that more roads, trails, firelines, fire towers, telephone lines, and surveys are essential; and that no funds are at hand to make these improvements. Continuing, the speaker said: "Your mines must have the support of the forest to keep running; your farms must have its beneficial influence to remain productive; your shops and your factories depend on it in a thousand ways; your newspapers, which unite in warning you against the dangers of further indifference use a forest product to carry a plea for forest preservation. And now—to-day—that branch of the government to which you have entrusted the care of your forests has barely enough funds to keep it alive until the next session of the Legislature."

farmers of the State feed and house the birds as the best protection for their crops. As a representative of the present day, he pledged the united support of the sportsmen in securing adequate appropriations for the Department of Forestry from the next Legislature. One of the most striking statements made in the meeting was Dr. Kaibfus' statement that "It is nothing less than criminal negligence for the State of Pennsylvania to purchase forest land and then allow it to be burned over because of senselessly inadequate appropriations for its protection." R. G. Conklin, State Forester, spoke in the evening on "Forest Protection in Pennsylvania." Mr. Conklin cited instances where the expenditure of hundreds of dollars in the prevention of forest fires would have saved thousands in timber in one day. "O'Neil on the Job.—J.
