AMERICAN GIRL SPOILED CHILD?

Wilcox Points Out Subtle and Elusive Offenses of Wives

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX
 The fallings of men which lead to divorce are usually of a glaring nature; of such a nature that he who runs may read. Drunkenness, or the abuse of intoxicants, which destroys the reasoning powers and the judgment; infidelity and all its ramifications; violent temper; laziness and failure to provide for a family; these are the main chapters in the book of masculine offenses against happy homes. But the offenses of wives are so frequently subtle and elusive, and so veiled from the public eye, that only those who live in the closest relations may discover them.
 They are the little foxes in the vine and parasites in the trees. The American girl is almost invariably a spoiled child before she reaches adolescence.
 She rules her father and mother and her brothers wait upon her. She is virtually the head of the house, and her wish is law and her whims are like royal edicts. If she marries the spoiled son of a fond mother it is a case of Greek meeting Greek, and discord must ensue. And if she marries an unselfish and worshiping husband she often forgets that there is such a thing as the turning of a crushed worm, and imposes upon his patience and kindness and unselfishness until he walks forth to meet her only in the divorce court.

Hides Faults From All But Family, and Public Takes Her Side
 Yet the weapons she has used in slaying Cupid have been concealed from all eyes save husband's or other eyes under her roof. And the underlying public is more than liable to believe she is the injured party when the divorce occurs.
 The passion of many women for hotel life, for excitement and for display amounts to a disease. It is, perhaps, the swinging of the pendulum from the dull and dreary monotony which characterized the lives of their foremothers. The women of this generation are, in many ways, suffering from a sort of hysteria caused by the suppression of the emotional natures of their mothers and grandmothers just as sons of clerymen do to excess, frequently, everything which their fathers refused to do in reason.
 The grandmothers and mothers who lived only to work and make the home comfortable for the men folk produced, by the crucifixion of all natural desires for pleasure and amusement, as descendants, a race of women home life men change little. He is the same in every generation. And the woman who wants to make the man she marries happy needs to understand this fact; and whatever else she may ask of him, to give him first the foundation of a comfortable, beautiful, well ordered and attractive home, where even the transient guest can feel the atmosphere of well being and content. This can be made only by the mental emanations of its inhabitants.

 A woman who sets forth in married life determined to make a real worthwhile wife and mother has chosen the most wonderful and fascinating career it is possible for her to pursue, and its scope is as wide as the universe. To create such a home and magnetize it with the love and enjoyment of a good woman's mind is to prepare an anteroom for heaven.
 Many a man inclined to stray into forbidden folds and to seek unwholesome associations would linger in this anteroom were it provided for him by love and good sense, in place of his being forced into the unnatural surroundings of hotels.
Petty Jealousies of Husband's Relatives and Friends Lead to Divorce
 A man has been known to marry for a good hearted man in his impulses towards relatives and near friends, are oftentimes causes of divorce. A man as men usually do), and to set forth with every intention of being a fair and kind and just husband; but before many months she found his books and domestic pets objects of a small-minded woman's nagging jealousy. And Cupid was driven out-of-doors, never to return.
 Unreasonable extravagance of women is another cause of disaster to the marital association, and this propensity drives many a good-hearted man whose great desire is to please his wife into dishonesty and double-dealing in business matters.

 Behind prison doors to-day men are serving long sentences who sinned first through weakness and over-devotion to the whims of selfish and unthinking wives. The indolent wife, who settles down lazily into the comfort of a good home, satisfied with the fact that she is married to a man who loves her and unconsciously that she must make an effort to keep her husband in love, is another likely candidate for the divorce court.
 In our time and clime ninety-nine men of each hundred like to feel proud of their wives. They enjoy seeing them look well and regret to observe the effect of time upon their beauty. The woman who does not try to keep herself attractive, and who allows self-indulgence and indolence to destroy her figure and complexion, is inviting unhappiness to come into her home.
Preservation of Her Physical Charms One of Wife's Chief Duties
 77777 In this busy age, when telegrams and telephones keep the whole world in touch, men are aware of the existence of women who understand the art of defying time and who remain attractive despite the passing of years. Even in remote country places men have ceased to regard old age for the matron as a necessity. They realize there is something lacking in the temperament of a woman who lets herself go merely because she is a wife and mother.
 Since men view the subject in this light, the wise woman will not permit her husband to feel ashamed of her. She will think of the art of preservation of her charms as one of her sacred duties, and she will regard the gymnasium and the study of physical culture and the practice of mental calisthenics with respect close to reverence.

 In the new life which has come to women in the past generation there lies a danger of becoming too absorbed in personal pursuits to keep in touch with the tastes and ambitions of the husband—even to lose all interest in them.
 It is well for husband and wife to have their separate tastes and pleasures to a certain degree. But that degree must never lead to diverging interests, and must never leave the husband feeling solitary and without the companionship or sympathy of the wife, either in his business or his amusements, nor must the wife be left to find sympathy or admiration elsewhere than at home.
