

Its Training that Counts

Write for new catalog, a beautifully illustrated book of 128 pages.

The Diploma of The Indiana Normal means that the graduate has been through a course of practical training which equips one to fill the best positions in the teaching world.

Indiana Graduates are so successful because they are ambitious and because they are trained to win success.

Pennsylvania State Normal School of Indiana, Pa.

Practical Thorough Efficient

The location of Indiana Normal is healthful. The buildings are modern—steam heat, electric light, elevators, etc.—and every element counting for comfort, health and cheer is provided. $200 covers all expenses for one year—excepting books—for those preparing to teach. Others pay $250.

The Indiana Conservatory of Music and the Indiana School of Business, two of the best equipped schools in America, are connected with Indiana Normal.

42nd Year Opens September 12th, 1916.

Mary paled. How near she had been to a hopeless, fatal betrayal. When she rejoined Mona that night her mind was definitely made up. She would force the situation to a climax without further delay. She saw now that every day might hold fresh pitfalls and new dangers. Until almost daybreak the two girls considered the various elements of the game, and when they finally retired, it was with the decision to stage the last act of their little drama that same night.

It was nearly noon when Mary called up Wentworth at his apartment, and asked hurriedly for an immediate interview. When he met her an hour later she imparted to him the intelligence that Mrs. Douglas and Carlton, after the theater, had been together in the former's apartment at the Rossmore.

"And I have a plan which I think will give us what we have been scheming for," ended Mary enthusiastically. For several moments she spoke swiftly and nervously, and at the end Wentworth caught her hand enthusiastically.

"Splendid!" he cried, "I'll be ready when you are." The die was cast! For just a moment Mary hesitated, and then she straightened her shoulders bravely. It was too late now to turn back!

It was just before 11 o'clock that night when the telephone in the apartment of Mary and Mona announced the arrival of Wentworth in the lobby. Mary asked him to come up at once. She was alone, and she met and greeted with Carlton shortly after a 7 o'clock dinner, leaving Mary to put the finishing touches on the last act they had planned in their little drama. She received Wentworth at the door, with a show of surprise, which made him through the living room into an inner bedroom.

It was just before 11 o'clock that night when the telephone in the apartment of Mary and Mona announced the arrival of Wentworth in the lobby. Mary asked him to come up at once. She was alone, and she met and greeted with Carlton shortly after a 7 o'clock dinner, leaving Mary to put the finishing touches on the last act they had planned in their little drama. She received Wentworth at the door, with a show of surprise, which made him through the living room into an inner bedroom.

Carlton was facing her with a drawn revolver.

Wentworth glanced around him cautiously, and his eyes lighted as he noted a camera, and flash light apparatus, already in the room, and trained on the living room.

"All that we need now is to wait until she and Carlton are seated at their tete-a-tete supper—and then light the powder. The camera will do the rest," chuckled Mary in separate words.

"And we will sell the plate to the highest bidder," said Wentworth with a grimace which showed that he at least was in deadly earnest.

"Hush!" cautioned Mary suddenly, catching his arm, as he turned in the hall lock. The next moment Mona and Carlton entered the suite, and the latter removed his companion's wraps with a show of tenderness, which made Wentworth smile again in anticipation. A tempting lunch of cold viands had already been set on a table. Carlton took the seat, which Mona indicated, and edged his chair closer to her, as she expected the arrival of the young man. Neither had glanced toward the bed room.

"Hush!" whispered Mary.

Wentworth softly struck a match and dropped it into the powder, as Mary hung aside the heavy draperies, screening the entrance to the living room. The bright flash of the powder mingled with a cry of fright from Mona—and Wentworth stepped into the outer room, smiling cynically. But his smile was suddenly frozen.

Carlton was facing him with a drawn revolver.

"Hands up!" snapped the young actor.

Wentworth whirled about—to confront a second revolver in the hands of Mary. The girl laughed at the scowl of rage on his face.

"Caught with the goods!" she mocked.

Wentworth bit his lip, glancing covertly around him in an effort to measure his chances of escape. But he was already enough to realize that the trap was secure.

"You devil!" he growled as Mary laughed again, commanded Carlton. "The same up. We've got you fair, and we mean to hold you. You know your connection with The Tattler, and your own judgment must tell you that we have evidence enough of your blackmailing methods to send you to prison for more years than you would probably care to reckon!" glowered Wentworth.

"First—Those letters of Mrs. Burton, and next your promise to put The Tattler out of business and remove yourself from this vicinity!"

"Which means, of course, immunity from the law?" sneered Wentworth.

"Not quite!" It was Mary who spoke. "You are forgetting the expenses of the case—and the money you have made us spend to get you where we wanted you! I think five thousand would about cover it. You can give us a check, I think we can take it for granted that you won't stop payment!"

Wentworth clenched his hands as though meditating a bolt for it—and then bowed ironically.

"You win—with my compliments!"

Mona stepped to the telephone and ordered a taxicab.

"We may as well wind up the business in hand now. We'll accompany you to The Tattler sanctum—if you don't mind."

"As you will," said Wentworth indifferently.

The quartette descended by way of the elevator. Carlton kept the revolver in his outer coat pocket, with the muzzle protruding through the cloth at an angle, which assuaged any thought of a rush for liberty, which Wentworth might have entertained. Twenty minutes later, they were in the dingy, paper-littered office, in which the questionable activities of The Tattler were conducted.

Wentworth stepped to a safe in the corner, spun the knob, and tossed a thin packet of letters on the table.

THE END.

PENNSYLVANIANS AT FRONT

First Engineers and Hospital Corps Reached El Paso and Encamp

Special to the Telegraph

El Paso, Tex., July 5.—Pennsylvania National Guardsmen arrived at Camp Pershing last evening. The first to reach this city were companies A and B, of the First Pennsylvania Engineers. Their train arrived over the Rock Island and they went into camp near the Massachusetts Artillery. The Hospital Corps, of the Pennsylvania National Guard, followed the engineers into camp, and the artillery is expected soon.

National Guard troops in Camp Cotton and Camp Pershing spent a sweltering hot Fourth of July in camp, as it was 110 in the shade at the camp and one of the hottest days of the hottest summer in many years. All but those needed for guard duty and for setting up camp and police work were permitted to come to the city where they swarmed through the streets, bought soft drinks and ice cream and sat in the shade of a few trees to be found in the plaza.

BOY OF NINE IS MURDERED

Suffragist's Cry Stops President in Labor Speech

Special to the Telegraph

Washington, D. C., July 5.—Speaking to more than 10,000 union workers at the new building of the American Federation of Labor yesterday, President Wilson dedicated labor's new headquarters "to common counsel and a common understanding." The President was in the midst of his plea and had declared it his duty to serve "all classes," when suddenly there was a commotion on the stand close behind the speaker.

"Mr. President, if you truly desire to serve all classes," demanded Miss Vernon, "why do you block the national suffrage amendment?"

There was a rush of police toward the interrupter, who was firmly placed in her seat, while the President, visibly embarrassed, strove to quell the hubbub which had arisen.

Finally turning to the crowd directly in front, the President remarked that "we will have to continue on that later," and resumed his set speech.

At the close of the meeting the suffragist again challenged: "Answer, Mr. President. Why do you block the national suffrage amendment?"

Miss Vernon was escorted at once from the stand by the police and taken across the street to prevent further protests.

Bullet and Pitcher Weapons in Fight Over Woman

Special to the Telegraph

Bethlehem, Pa., July 5.—With a bullet in his left leg, Edward Ushafer, superintendent of buildings of a girls' boarding school, is in a critical condition in St. Luke's Hospital. On a cot next to Ushafer lies William Mock, who shot Ushafer. Mock has a fractured jaw and a six-inch cut across the face, inflicted by Ushafer, who threw a glass pitcher at him.

Four times in the last few years Ushafer and Mock have fought. Monday night the woman and her husband patched up their differences and decided to forget the past.

Yesterday morning Mock appeared at the Ushafer home and tried to induce the woman to again leave her husband. While Mock was pleading, Ushafer appeared. There was a fight and Mock used his revolver. Ushafer plunged to the floor. Recovering quickly from the shock, although he is believed to be mortally wounded, he crawled to a table and got hold of the water pitcher.
