61 REGIMENTS OF WORKERS INJURED

Vast Army of Employees Suffer During First Five Months of 1916

Sixty-one regiments of workers were wounded in the industries of Pennsylvania during the first five months of 1916. More men than would complete one-half the enrollment of a war strength regiment were killed during the same period.

That declaration was made to-day by Commissioner John Price Jackson of the Department of Labor and Industry who presented data compiled by the Bureau of Statistics and Information of the Labor Department indicating that 954 workers had been killed in Pennsylvania industries between January 1 and June 1, 1916, and 100,287 others injured. The total of killed and wounded reaches 101,241.

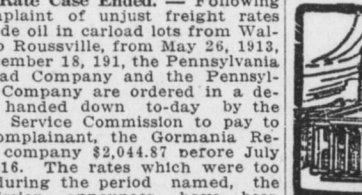

Counting approximately 1600 men to a regiment, on a war strength footing in the United States Army, one can realize that the same number of fatalities as occurred in Pennsylvania mines and factories during the first five months of this year would annihilate more than half a regiment, said Commissioner Jackson to-day.

The workers injured outnumber the entire regular army of the United States. If every man of the regular army, along the Mexican border, had received a wound in battle the aggregate number of wounded would not equal the roster of those wounded in the mills of Pennsylvania during the first five months of this year. An average of 191 workers were killed every month during the first five months of the year and an average of 20,248 were injured each month. This terrible loss can be greatly reduced by carefulness and thoughtfulness by both employer and employees.

One hundred and forty-nine workers were killed in January, 227 in February and 251 in March according to a classification of fatal accidents made in the Labor Department. The remainder of the fatalities, occurring in April and May are not being classified.
