I believe that we are going to have warm weather at last, re-marked Carrie as she took off her veil and rolled it primly, took off her black hat, ran Helen's white comb through her straight, neatly combed hair and followed Helen into the coolness of the living room. "I see you have new awnings here, Helen; more extravagance. I should think you would drive Warren into the insane asylum."

"That happens to be a piece of Warren's extravagance this time," said Helen, laughing. She was determined to hold her temper this afternoon, no matter what it cost. After all, it was ridiculous to mind. Carrie said or did. She was so obviously setting out to be disagreeable that it did not pay to humor her and notice it.

"Do you mean to say it was Warren's idea?"

"Exactly," Helen responded. "Warren has wanted green and white awnings ever since last season, and now we have them."

"I don't think they will wear as well as the brown. Give me the more sober colors every time. I don't believe in the fad of the foolishness."

"Not even if it's prettier?"

"No; it's only a fad and the material costs more; you can't deny that."

"But not enough to make any difference, and just look how restful it makes the room seem. Are you warm still, Carrie? Wait a minute and I'll have Mary make some lemonade."

"Don't go to any extra trouble, Helen. I don't mind how restful it makes the room seem. Are you warm still, Carrie? Wait a minute and I'll have Mary make some lemonade."

HELEN REFLECTS.

"It won't be a bit of trouble," assured Helen, glad to escape from the room for a few minutes. Suppose she had to build her life along the narrow lines that Warren's sister chose for hers. It might easily be possible if Warren were allowed to gain the upper hand.

Helen reflected that ever since she had married Warren his entire family had tried to make her over according to the Curtis patterns. And they had succeeded to a certain extent, but not altogether. Helen was glad to know that she had some individuality left.

When she returned to the living room Mary followed her with a tray. There was ice tinkling in tall glasses, a little silver pot filled with fragrant Orange Pekoe, some wafer-like rice cakes and some of Mary's rolled bread sandwiches with crisp lettuce and delectable mayonnaise spread between slices. Carrie was lying in the chaise longue, her head propped up with pillows.

"Well," she remarked, smiling. "This is the first time I have sat in one of these things. I had no idea they were so comfortable. I think I shall have Fred get me one, Helen."

"I knew you would like it," said Helen, beaming delightedly. "And I've brought you something good to eat. You like your tea with lots of lemon, don't you? Put the tray on the wagon, Mary; that's right. Now I'll wheel it right up next to you, Carrie, and you needn't move. I'll just serve you where you are, you look so comfortable."

Helen was so relieved that she had managed to put Carrie into a good humor that she was actually eager to keep her so. It would be so nice if just once Warren should hear good reports about his wife's treatment of his sister.

As a general rule Carrie was sure to artfully suggest to Warren her disapproval of Helen, and although Warren at times resisted his sister's influence, still there had been a great many heartaches over this family interference.

Helen poured the hot tea over the ice and sugared it carefully. Then she prepared the lemon and placed

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN
 By Beatrice Fairfax

TALK TO HIM FRANKLY
 Dear Miss Fairfax: I am twenty and for seven months have been going about with a man of twenty-two who has some fine qualities. By that I mean that he does not smoke, does not play cards, and has a pleasant disposition. He earns only $12 a week. I would like to know if I should go out with this young man, as when we go he spends money and I feel he can not afford it.

MABEL M.

Your attitude toward this young man is admirable, and in very pleasant contrast to that of some of our modern girls so selfishly intent on what they call a good time that they never stop to consider whether their men friends are justified in expenditures. Why not tell this young man frankly that you would enjoy visiting in your own home or taking walks or street car rides these pleasant evenings just as much as indulging in more extravagant pleasure? No man can admire you less for a frank and friendly interest in his welfare, and the confession that it is his society you enjoy rather than the pleasures he can buy you will make the right sort of boy realize that you are a thoughtful friend whose interest is well worth having.

SWEETHEART vs. SISTER
 She Answers the Question: "Have Men Different Standards for Each?"
 By Beatrice Fairfax

The price of popularity for too many girls to-day seems to be the lowering of the standard of womanly sweetness and dignity. And to any girl who is tempted to meet the terms of the too masculine love pirates I want to sound a word that shall at once warn and plead and convince.

Human nature is about the most unchanging thing in a variable world. Human nature never values what it can get for the mere asking. Every one estimates highly the things he finds it difficult to obtain.

Feminine favor will always be one of life's two goals for men. The other, of course, is success.

Think how a man struggles and works for the worldly success he has set his heart upon. And think how, on the way to his goal, many a big man turns aside for a little light dalliance with this girl and that one, and marries at last a dignified—often seemingly unattractive—young woman of a type far different than that his sweethearts represented.

Girls ask "Why?" in two widely divergent ways. "Why am I unpopular?" Is it because I'm too dignified and won't let the boys kiss me?" asks Mary at twenty.

And if she decides against herself and proceeds to capitulate to a boy who demands a kiss in return for a little social attention. Mary, at thirty, asks this: "Why am I left alone now? I was the most popular girl in my 'ten years ago. I had dozens of beaux and Lucy had none, and Jane only one. Yet they are happily married and I am left alone. Why?"

The Price of Popularity

Popularity can be bought for the moment by cheap concessions to masculine emotion. The girl who lets a boy kiss her when she happens to be in catering to the emotions of the moment. She is building nothing permanent and lasting. And when it comes to marriage, no sane man finds that lifelong relationship on any momentary flare of affection.

Instead, he chooses the stable qualities of congeniality and liking and respect—plus the delicate emotions which have grown by self-denial instead of wearing themselves out through cheap excess.

The girl who says to a man when he tries to get her to drink or to permit him some liberty which seems slight, but which will inevitably lead to greater ones: "Would you want your sister to do that?" is not bromidic and foolish in spite of the fact that the question is almost ordinary and trite. Instead, she is a sane young woman, who is dealing with one of the world's old basic facts of human nature.

The things a man would decry in his sister he resents also in his wife. The things a man selfishly asks of his temporary sweetheart are not always the things he feels a self-respecting, dignified girl should concede.

And a girl who recognizes that fact and who doesn't make the blunder of catering to the emotion of the moment is far more likely to become a permanent factor in a man's life than is a girl who capitulates to his least request!

CARRIZAL FIGHT FIERCELY WAGED

"We Will Pass Over You" Capt. Boyd Replied to Commander's Ultimatum

Dallas, Texas, July 14. — El Pueblo, official organ of the Carranza government, in its issued of July 1, received here, prints the official report on the fight between Mexicans and American troops under Captain Boyd at Carrizal.

The report comes from Lieutenant Colonel Genovevo Rivas, who took command of the Mexican troops after General Felix Gomez was killed. The report was made to General Gonzales at Juarez and sent by him to Mexico City. It follows:

"I have the honor to report to you that on June 21, at 7 a. m., an American force, composed of 80 to 100 men appeared here. By order of General Felix Gomez, I went out to confer with the commander of said force to learn the object of its presence. He said that he was looking for a gang of bandits that were in this vicinity."

"I told him there was no gang of bandits operating in this district, due to the perfect watchfulness of the Constitutional forces. He then said that he was going to Villa Ahumada to look for a deserter, to which I replied that we had orders not to permit American troops to move in any direction except toward the North. He replied that such orders mattered nothing to him; that he had orders to go to Villa Ahumada and that he would do so regardless of our bullets."

"After I had reported the result of the interview General Gomez personally went to talk with the American commander, asking the same questions that I had asked a few minutes before and receiving the same answer. General Gomez told him that he would regret very much to be obliged to oppose the Americans with force and made him the proposition that he wait three or four hours until the matter could be put before the military commander at Juarez by telegraph."

"Will Pass Over You"

"The haughty American commander replied that he did not want to lose more time and that he would pass over us. My general replied that if he (the American commander) thought he was able to do so, to try it."

"My general retired with his escort to where our troops were and the American commander returned to his troops. The American commander assembled his cavalry and advanced them in firing line against our forces, composed of the Second, Third and Fourth squadrons of the Second Regiment, who remained in extended line without making any aggressive movement.

"The Americans opened fire at a distance of eighty meters, to which our soldiers gallantly replied, jogging the combat. The fight was intense and lasted for two hours in which our first line sustained the enemy's fire with valor."

"General Gomez having been killed early in the fight, I assumed command and ordered the advance of the first squadron of the Second Regiment against the right flank of the enemy and another squadron on the left. The movements were made promptly and with precision, forcing the enemy to flee, abandoning their dead, their horses and arms. The enemy dead were twelve, and we captured twenty-two prisoners."

The report gives the names of thirty Mexicans killed, of whom eleven were officers, and forty-three wounded, of whom nine were officers.

40,000 WAR WIDOWS
 London, July 14. — Nearly 40,000 women in this country have already been made widows by the war. When the conflict started and government officials were making estimates of the number of widows that in all probability would be created by the struggle, one of the highest estimates was 30,000. When Lord Kitchener heard of it he told those who were responsible for making provision for the war widows that the estimate was too low and said that they should make provision for at least 50,000. As a result of the recent naval battle 1,550 widows were added to the list of women receiving pensions.

HEAVILY TAX TOBACCO
 Vienna, July 14. — By raising the prices of cigars, cigarettes and tobacco by an average of thirty-five per cent, the Austrian State Monopoly hopes to raise an additional sum of nearly $16,000,000 a year.

To Make Skin Clear

Don't worry about skin troubles. You can have a clear, clean complexion by using a little zemo, obtained at any drug store for 25c, or extra large bottle at $1.00.

TO TAKE OFF FLESH AND REDUCE WEIGHT

Eat Plenty of Wholesome Food, But Breathe Deeply and Try a Little Oil of Korein With Meals.

Some people seem to be able to eat whatever they please without its increasing their weight to any degree, while on the other hand other folks, inclined to stoutness, try to eat lightly of the so-called fleshmaking foods but keep gaining weight all the time. Such a condition is both unnatural and dangerous but can often be quickly overcome by practicing deep breathing in the open air. The blood of the average over-stuffed person seemingly fails to accept enough oxygen to consume the excessive fatty material in the food. But frequent open air deep breathing forces additional oxygen into the system, largely overcoming this defect and preventing further increase in weight. Then this deep breathing plan is accompanied by the use of a little oil of korein, taking a few drops in a capsule with each meal and again before going to bed, it becomes possible to greatly reduce the weight even in a very few days.

The best feature of this reducing method is that it is absolutely safe and unlike so many flesh reducing systems,
