The first service anybody can render society is to present it with a strong, symmetrical and self-restrain-ed individual member.

(By William T. Ellis.) There is a beautiful social ideal toward which all dreamers lock. It conceives of a community wherein men and women have subjected their lower nature eto the higher, and live for the great goals of mutual help-fulness and self-improvement. Be-cause brotherhood is the standard of that perfect society, no man sins against himself; for it is impossible for one member of a body to be hurt without loss and injury to all. There have been many attempts to legislate this golden age into existence, built they always have failed, and always will fail, since only a new and reg-mant life principle, even the impart-of individuals, can introduce a broth-erhood that w. be real and work-able. We are steadily progressing to ward this long-desired morning; bui-when it dawns it will not be called the Golden Age, nor Utopia, nor So-cialism, but the Kingdom of Heaven. The reins of the body must be giv-en into Christ's bande are. He aver.

One of the heartening and oft-re-peated exhortations of the Bible is, "Be strong; fear not." That is the divine programme for life. Faint-heartedness is a denial of confidence in God. He is honored by fearless endeavor; all His prophets and he-roes have been men who have not been afraid to attempt great things for God.
