Cadillac Cars Used on Mountain Stage Line

Daily service on a mountain stage line is well calculated to test the staying powers of a motor car. Such a service is maintained with six Cadillac Eights between Los Angeles and Bakersfield, California, and the cars make the trip from one city to the other in considerably less time than the trains on the railroad.

The cars are operated on a regular schedule, which calls for speed up to the limit which the state law permits.
They carry from five to nine passengers on a trip and are always well laden with baggage.

Each car makes a round trip every day, covering more than 250 miles so the solid seach. On the railroad.

They make the run over the mountains entirely on high gear, which is impossible for most cars, especially when heavily loaded. The Cadillacs are averaging more than ten miles per gallon of gasaline and better than 600 miles. aging more than ten miles per gallon of gasoline and better than 600 miles per gallon of oil. They are standing the test of this severe service admirably, and before the year is ended, those now on the road will have traveled more than 60,000 miles.
