RILEY'S BODY IS LYING IN STATE

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY the same spot where Mr. Riley stood a few years ago when he recited his own poem "Old Glory" at the time the body of General Lawton lay in state in the Capitol.

Sketch of Poet's Life

James Whitcomb Riley, born of the Middle West, sang the joys, sorrows, fancies and humors of its folk, largely in its own dialect. The world was so touched by his inspiration and the realism of his homely symbols that he was one of the few, that, devoting their lives to poetry, gained a fortune. Mr. Riley was peculiarly sensitive as to the advance of age and evaded inquiries as to the date of his birth. His almost invariable answer to any question about his age was: "This side of forty."

The poet was the son of Reuben A. Riley, a lawyer and political speaker of Greenfield, Ind. The boy could not be brought to the dull routine of school days; but he was wise in the lore of streams and fields. His mother, who was Elizabeth Marine before her marriage, was a writer of verse, and Riley in later life, attributed some of his impracticability to her.

Instead of preparing for the practice of law, as his father wished, the son turned itinerant sign painter. For ten years he roved through the Ohio valley, painting signs on fences. He had the trick of the brush and pencil and cleverly drew sketches illustrating the virtues of merchandise. He was naturally musical, and shone as a fiddler in the villages at which his party stopped at night. He played for dances and at concerts in country hotels. He wrote rhymes, which sometimes found their way into country newspapers.

He led this cheerful, free and easy life late in the '70s, then he took employment as a reporter on a newspaper at Anderson, Ind. In 1877, for the purpose, he said, of proving that he could write poetry of value, he perpetrated the Poe hoax, which for years was a literary sensation. He wrote a poem in the style of Edgar Allan Poe, to which he gave the characteristic title of "Leonie," and it was offered to the public as a hitherto unpublished product of the genius of Poe.

In some quarters the poem was accepted as genuine; in others it was denounced as a fraud. After the controversy had waged for months Riley confessed.

In the early '80s he began writing verses in "Hoosier" dialect for the old Indianapolis Journal. He sent some of his poems to Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and they received his praise. A volume was published and "the Hoosier poet" began to win a public. He was an excellent reader of his own dialect verses and for the following fifteen years, or until 1895, he made tours of the country, appearing in public with great success, both alone and in association with the humorist, Bill Nye, who was his intimate friend.

Publication of books of poems year after year brought Riley a fortune and wide recognition of his literary genius, and not only in the genre form. Many of his poems are of imaginative fantasy of gently philosophic.

In 1902 he received the degree of master of arts from Yale University and in 1904 the University of Pennsylvania conferred the honorary degree of doctor of letters. Indiana University conferred the honorary degree of L.L. D. on him in 1907.

Riley was never married. He lived in the old family residence with his married sister and her family, leading a very quiet existence. He had few familiar friends, but was a lover of children, whose spirit he divined so intimately. He cared for few books, but was devoted to the few and knew them vitally.

To provide for any in need of medical attention, a staff of doctors and nurses from the Chalmers factory will have a special tent, where all cases of illness will be treated.
