POLICEMEN GET COMPENSATION

Interesting Decision by Chairman Mackey Is Made Public This Morning

Constitutionality of the Pennsylvania workmen's compensation act is upheld and a policeman declared to be a public servant and to come under the operation of the compensation act by Chairman Harry A. Mackey, of the board, in an opinion given to-day reversing the referee in a case decided against the city of Reading and appealed to the board by the municipality. The decision will affect the hundreds of municipal divisions in the State.

Daniel B. Smith, a Reading policeman, was declared to have died from the result of a fall during which he injured his side and compensation was awarded the widow. The evidence is held to be insufficient to sustain the verdict.

Mr. Mackey decides that the claim that the municipality was deprived of the right of election of trial by jury is not well founded because the Supreme Court has held that municipal corporations, being creatures of legislation, have no constitutional guaranty of trial by jury. As to the objections to the title of the act, he says that the title puts everyone on notice that the common law method of settling questions between employer and employe has been abolished and that a new scheme of compensation has been adopted with a right of election.

The chairman decides that a policeman has been accorded the benefits of compensation, saying: "It is perfectly evident that the Legislature intended to extend the benefits of this law to every servant of the State or of a municipality, city, county or other governmental agency who renders service for a valuable consideration. This section expressly excludes the casual employe not engaged in the regular business of the employer and persons who take materials to their homes for the purpose of working upon them."

In regard to the claim that the act is unconstitutional in that it goes against the constitutional provision regulating recovery of damages, the opinion says: "The Legislature by the act of 1915 repealed all acts giving to an employe any right of action against his employer based upon negligence, except as provided for in Section 2 of said act, and that in its place there has been substituted, not a right of action nor any scheme of litigation either known to the framers of the Constitution or regulated by any provision of that instrument but rather a scheme of compensation born of new conditions drafted in conformity with the spirit of the times and in harmony with other humanitarian enactments."

Dynamite, Mule Terror of Camp, Is Mustered Out

Special to the Telegraph
Camp Whitman, N. Y. — This is the history of Dynamite, the male mule who has kept this camp in a state of war continuously for the last two weeks and surrendered unconditionally to-day.

Dynamite is a born strategist, and he needed no military training to display his genius. He came here two weeks ago, with 200 other green mules. He had scarcely arrived when a gunner from the First Field Artillery tried to rope him. The gunner is now in a state of convalescence.

Dynamite refused to stand hitched even to a post. Once they succeeded in harnessing him to a supply wagon. The wagon is now gradually rotting away in a neighboring creek. Dynamite then had the freedom of the camp, till the arrival of the regular army inspectors, who immediately ordered him mustered out of service.

The difficulty was to get him entrained. It took seven men four hours, this afternoon, to get a rope around his body, and then get a turn around his nose. Dynamite had a good deal to feel the pull. He tried once more and then docilely accepted the situation.

Here is a tip from the big Phillips at the Sixtieth street yard of the Grand Central.

Dynamite is in a C. & O. car, No. 10,312. Be careful when you open the door.

This Cinderella Gets Damages From City

Cleveland, O.—"And Cinderella married the prince and they lived happily ever after."

But not so romantic was the denouement of the story enacted in Common Pleas Court here Judge Phillips after twelve jurymen had spent the day in gazing upon the shapely slipper of another Cinderella.

The jurors decided that the plaintiff was entitled to $2,250 from the city because the slipper had slipped on the pavement of Euclid avenue and had permanently injured her.

The modern Cinderella is Miss Helen Barry, who sued the city for damages, alleging that the glass discs in the pavement where she fell were raised to the level of the heel of the slipper, tripping her.

TUBERCULOSIS FOUND IN HENS

State Expert Says That It Should Be Stamped Out Without Any Delays

Tuberculosis exists among the hens in the barnyards, chicken coops and poultry farms of Pennsylvania far more than generally known and there are a great many hens in the State that are tubercular, compared with seven or eight years back, according to W. Theodore Wittman, expert poultryman, of the Department of Agriculture.

This increase is no doubt due directly to the enormous increase in the last decade of the keeping and the attempt to keep poultry in large numbers on the intensive plan. In plain words on bare ground, soon sour, tainted and infected ground.

Without pretending to be ultra scientific, it is Mr. Wittman's opinion that avian, bovine and human tuberculosis are mere variations or adaptations of the same disease and that the practice of allowing poultry to feed after cattle or hogs that may be infected, or of allowing some human to expectorate where chickens can feed, is likely to infect some individual hen and she in time, especially on filthy ground, may finally infect an entire flock.

Avian tuberculosis is nearly always a disease of the abdominal cavity or, the nodules are nearly always found in the liver, bowels and spleen and rarely in the lungs. There is no sure way that can be commonly used to know whether a certain hen is tubercular without killing, followed by a post mortem. The most observable outward signs are a peculiar stare to the eye, a wasting of the bodily tissue, especially at the breast bone, and an occasional lameness or dragging of one leg. Occasionally there may be indications at the knee or hock joint and the sole of the foot.

Any hen "going light" should be promptly inspected, a post mortem made and if the characteristic nodules are found in parts as mentioned above, the carcass should be cremated and diligent search made for others in like condition. Pigeons going light or having "diseased" wing joints are in the same class and to be as promptly dealt with.

In a few cases known to the Department where this disease has been ignored, after a few years, it apparently assumed a virulent form attacking old and young chickens in large numbers and causing great loss and compulsory abandonment of poultry keeping. Fortunately on account of the wasting nature of the disease few reach the market, but, buyers will do well in all cases to reject carcasses where the liver is missing or the meat gone from the breast.

EIGHT COUNTIES INCREASE CORN

Reports on Manner in Which the Great Staple Crop Is Coming Along

Eight of the 67 counties of the State report to the State Department of Agriculture acreage sown to corn as equal to average years. They are Bucks, Carbon, Delaware, Franklin, Lancaster, Lebanon, Perry and Westmoreland. Eight counties report slight increases as follows: Chester, Cumberland, Dauphin, Greene, Montgomery, Philadelphia, Somerset and York. There will be practically no home-grown peaches in Elk, Fayette, Greene, Indiana, McKean, Potter, Tioga and Westmoreland counties and a very small production in Allegheny, Armstrong, Butler, Cambria, Forest, Venango and Washington counties.

What is being cut throughout the State and the department is receiving many questions about the moth in the wheat which is known as the angoumois grain moth. The crop pest inspectors of the bureau of zoology have been instructed to hold public meetings in interested territory and to instruct farmers how to control this pest in the bins by fumigating with carbon bisulphide. The department also has a circular on the subject which can be had for the asking.

Man Nearly Drowned When He Teases Goat

Aurora, Ind.—Chaw C. Suerman had a narrow escape from drowning in Hogan Creek after he and several other men teased a goat belonging to an animal circus and he was attacked by the animal.

Suerman was attempting to escape by running along the bank when the goat butted him off the embankment and he went down in about ten feet of water. The goat would not permit any one to approach the stream until one of the showmen arrived with a rope and succeeded in getting Suerman out as he was sinking the third time.

The needle worked its way through the walls of the child's stomach, and later was discovered protruding from his left arm. The baby is none the worse for the experience.
