CHAPTER 88

The infantile paralysis epidemic of 1916 presented so many symptoms similar to the symptoms of pigeons and chickens suffering from polyneuritis as a result of feeding upon denatured and demineralized grain foods, such as white flour and commercial cornmeal, that Professor Simon Baruch called the phenomenon to the attention of the Health Commissioner of the City of New York. "Denatured foods constitute the chief cause of infantile paralysis," is the substance of Professor Baruch's conclusions.

In June, 1916, an epidemic of infantile paralysis broke out in Brooklyn, N. Y.

The disease spread so rapidly that after 187 deaths had been reported in New York City and hundreds of cases discovered in eleven States and Canada, Health Commissioner Haven Emerson announced that he would appeal to the National Red Cross for help.

Three thousand three hundred physicians and nurses were put to work in New York and Brooklyn, and the

FROM TRENCHES TO BALL GROUND

Canadians, Blood-Stained, Come From Inferno, Sleep, Then Play Baseball

Headquarters of the British Army in France, June 30 (correspondence of the Associated Press).—These young Canadians in khaki playing baseball in a Belgian pasture could tell you what the shell fire at Verdun was like. They had been under it—the worst that has been known on the British front. Around them was the utter quiet of the countryside. In the distance the guns were still growling around Sorrel Hill, Sanctuary Wood and Hooge, the scene of the Germans' greatest battle in France.

Mud-stained and blood-stained, they had come away from the bloody piles of dirt which had been their trenches and after a long sleep had wondered what they were alive and ready to play baseball to pass the time till they should go into the trenches again. They had been in the thick of it from 8.30 a. m. till 2.30 p. m. on June 2, that bend in the line which had struck out as invincibly to the Germans as the Verdun salient for more than a year.

The Germans could arrange their guns in a fan-shape around it as they could at Verdun; and they did. When the guns began to speak the British guns spoke back; and even the old inhabitants of the Ypres salient agreed that it was the worst ever. Nobody on the spot ever supposed that there were so many guns in either the German or the British army.

"Silent Lizies" Speak But the officer inside the farmhouse sitting at the farmer's dining-room table could tell all about it—his small part of it. He and his men had been in and out of the trenches on their shifts till they were quite used to the monotony of the life which they led the daily wastage. The morning of June 2 was very quiet. A general who was taken prisoner afterward was making an inspection of the British line. A bullet overhead and an occasional shot in answer. At 8.30 the inferno broke without any more warning than a boiler explosion. The shells were British, or French, or German.

"Five-point nine" (that new 5.9-inch German shell), "whiz-bangs," trench mortar shells and "Silent Lizies" (a naval gun shell which is not heard coming until it bursts). "I knew what we were in for," said the officer.

Anybody with any experience at the front would know. At any time either side wants to concentrate its artillery on a certain frontage of trench, that frontage is bound to go down, and the attacking side can run its infantry in and take the debris. The difficulty is to hold it. This time the shells were coming from the front and both sides.

According to the system, they were laid on both the front and the support trenches with a curtain of fire between the two.

Stuck Through Fire "You know the kind of country it is," this quiet young officer from Toronto went on.

Nature as well as the shells is against the soldier. He digs a trench, water fills it. Mostly he must depend on sandbags—roofs and walls of sandbags. He cannot dig cellars twenty feet under the earth and crawl into them when the "clouds" of hell come down as in the hilly and mountainous country. So nobody ever has a good word to say about the Ypres salient except the peasants. The soil is rich.

"We had no order to go," said the officer. "We stuck."

They could not fire back at those guns thousands of yards away with their rifles. No one could get his head in the German trench opposite. If a man leaned over a section of parapet, remaining to fire, he and it might be blown away by another shell. The only thing to do was wait and hope to find any kind of cover he could in a fresh shell hole if no parapet remained and wait. Messengers in such instances, by the way, were shot on the side, have one chance of five in surviving if they try to go or come from the rear.

Five hours of this! Then at 1.30 in the afternoon orders to retreat did arrive.

That officer from Toronto gathered the remnants of his command under the snows of the winter and covered in the midst of geysers from the high explosives. Just as he was starting the tornado suddenly ceased. This meant the German infantry charge. As the Canadians started taking their cover they could in a half-obliterated communication trench they had a glimpse over their shoulders of the Germans arriving. German rifle and machine gun fire followed them on their way back to the support trenches, turning their tornado on the Germans in their new position. The British trenches blazed their rifle fire into German charges.

Shell Cuts Coat Another officer in another farmhouse—this one from British Columbia. He is pleased with the coat he wore when he went through a curtain of fire. A piece of shell had cut a big rent under the arm, without even penetrating through his undershirt.

"Some luck, eh?" he said. "I had a hunch that I would come through all right when I started to go."

His orders were to go up in reinforcement. He went. One shell struck in the midst of a platoon and got only one man. That was "some luck," too. Men fell, but the command went on to the counter attack.

"Those who are in the thick of it certainly get it hot," said another officer. "Especially in winter, when it thinks for the time being that it is fighting the whole war. Its casualty list looks pretty bad. But when you take the losses of a division as a whole you are surprised at the small percentage."
